The Hunting Life
A new generation of students embraces a Vermont tradition
When did it click for you?

Recently alumni worldwide went online and shared Middlebury moments that changed them— that really "clicked." Some of those moments are shown here.

Bottom line? Learning at Middlebury gives us strengths, awareness, and fellow travelers.

We’ve all had those moments when it clicked. And we can help others have them, too. There’s so much potential in young people at Middlebury. Help make it click for them.

Just visit go.middlebury.edu/give and click.
In the Woods

I’ve gone hunting with a few students over the years.

I think Dave Jareckie ’01 was the first. Dave came to Middlebury as an older student, 28-years-old. He had already competed in a couple of Olympics in the biathlon, in 1992 and again in 1994, so he had what you’d call a different student profile. It was Dave who introduced me to spring turkey hunting. And then a few years after Dave graduated, I’d go hunting with one of my Nordic athletes, Donovan Dums ’06. We hunted deer and turkey together. But Katie McFarren ’14? That’s a great story.

A few years ago, when I was still coaching cross-country, Katie was one of my runners. And her first winter here, she and another student joined me and my wife, Beth Ann, on one of our snowshoe hikes into the mountains; we’ve been doing this for years, taking students on winter hikes. On the hike, I remember asking Katie if she was a vegetarian. She looked at me kind of funny, said “no,” and asked why I was asking. I explained that on each of these hikes, we would stop, dig a fire pit in the snow, cut up some hardwood (I always carried a saw with me just for this purpose), allow the wood to burn down to red-hot coals, craft some skewers from green wood, and cook up some venison.

Her face lit up. “Venison!” she said. “I love venison.” I must have looked surprised, because she excitedly told me that she had been hunting with her dad since she was a kid growing up in Nevada. “Well then,” I replied, “next fall, let’s go hunting.”

Now, I must admit I had pretty much forgotten about this conversation by the time fall came back around, but one day after practice, she asked me: “Are we going to go hunting?”

A few days later, we went down to the Cornwall town clerk’s office to get a state hunting license. Katie already had a license from Nevada and had been in residence in Vermont for more than a year, so she was able to pick up a license that day.

I had a .30-30 rifle at home that belonged to my son, and I told Katie that she was more than welcome to use it, but first I wanted her to get comfortable with it before we went out. I set up a target in the pasture behind my house, walked Katie back 50 yards, and asked her to show me what she could do. Well, she must have put three shots all within inches of each other. She looked over at me, smiled, and said, “I was on the rifle team in high school.”

That season we went out hunting probably six different times, looking for deer in and around Cornwall. I’d pick her up well before dawn at Adirondack Circle, and off we’d go. We visited spots where I had seen deer before, but that fall, we didn’t see anything. Not one deer. But that didn’t detract from the experience.

I still think about Katie’s reaction when I asked if she was a vegetarian. And the venison that night? I do my own butchering, so the meat was prepared just right. And after it had marinated for a while—perfect.
Middlebury's solar farm, located just west of campus along Route 125, consists of 34 solar panels, which produce about 200,000 kilowatt-hours annually.

Above the earth, grass, and snow of a former hayfield, the College’s solar panels float in their resting position as the sun god descends. The collectors perform their harvest between heaven and earth, like an energy-absorbing sculpture that parachuted down from the sky or mushrooms that rose from the soil. Their rhythm of position suggests the ordered wavelengths of light upon which they thrive. They offer a promise of warmth for the cold night to come. This is the bold, new aesthetic of a sustainable world: the formal beauty of the contrast between a modern machine in a pastoral landscape, the conceptual beauty of power generation that works with the environment, the social beauty of people taking responsibility for their part of the planet.

John Huddleston is the Fletcher Professor of Studio Art

Photograph by Brett Simison

To see the solar panels in action, take an aerial tour of campus at goo.gl/middlebury/campus.

Winter 2014 3
Underwater divers are but one of many popular attractions at Tokyo’s Sunshine Aquarium.

In the bustling district of Ikebukuro in downtown Tokyo sits Sunshine City, a 60-story shopping mall that is home to all sorts of stores and amusements—including an aquarium. Ikebukuro is about a 30-minute train ride from the International Christian University’s campus in Mitaka, and it is one of many fascinating neighborhoods to explore on the weekends. Even after multiple visits, I was surprised to find that two of these floors are dedicated to the Sunshine Aquarium, where even in such a tight-packed urban space, one can observe scuba divers swimming alongside sharks. After spending the day popping in and out of bustling shops and restaurants, I found that this serene aquarium provided the perfect underwater escape from the hustle and bustle of city life in Tokyo.

Text and Photo by Stewart Hoffman ’14. He studied at Middlebury’s C.V. Starr School in Japan.
Imagine being a 20-something student with the opportunity to step into the shoes of a curator and into the private rooms of prominent galleries. I was provided this opportunity in Emmie Donadio’s course that first began in 1999; each winter term, a handful of students research, propose, and execute the purchase of artwork for the permanent collection at the Middlebury College Museum of Art. In the early weeks of January, we gathered in a room, turned the lights off, clicked through slide after slide of contemporary photography and video, and debated how far each artist pushed the boundaries of the medium. Emmie offered invaluable guidance. No one could better equip us with the knowledge we needed to ask the right questions or share in our excitement when discovering something fresh, something that challenged our understanding of photography—both visually and conceptually.

Leann Xiwei Li ’12 lives and works in New York City
Photograph by Brett Simison
Search MiddNet, a database of more than 8,000 alumni and parents who have volunteered to be a resource for students and alumni about careers.

Post a job on the job databank, or search for opportunities.

Upload a résumé to the résumé databank, or search to fill a position.

Join today at www.middleburyonline.com using your eight-digit Middlebury ID number, found on the address label of your magazine.

Career Networking—One more benefit available at middleburyonline.com, the private network for alumni and students. Register today!

Questions? Contact the Alumni Office at alumni@middlebury.edu or 802.443.5183.
24 News
Ron Liebowitz announces that he will step down from the presidency on June 30, 2015, and the Board of Trustees unveils a new governance structure to take effect next year.

27 Fact Finder
Each Saturday during the academic year, a little bit of Cannes, Sundance, and Hollywood can be found at Midd. We peek under the hood of the Hirschfield International Film Series.

30 Map
A sample survey of where academic departments and programs can be found on campus.

32 Old Chapel
President Liebowitz discusses radical changes to trustee governance in this issue’s Q&A.

54 Pursuits
Inside the mind and studio of an Emmy-winning visual effects supervisor.

56 In the Queue
With her brilliant second novel, My Notorious Life, Kate Manning ’79 avoids the dreaded sophomore slump.

58 Class Notes

72 Short Story
When Lionel Hampton showed up at KDR...

82 Vault
Mary Rolph Lamontagne ’85—then and now.

96 Road Taken
An alumna returns to teach a winter-term course—and contemplates all that goes with the assignment.

34 The Call of the Wild
What does it mean to be a Middlebury student—and a dedicated hunter?
By Sarah Tuff ’95

40 Conventional Wisdom
Folks make assured statements in conversation all the time, falling back on the notion of "conventional wisdom" to support their claims. We asked a dozen faculty experts to examine 12 common beliefs and then let us know how they hold up to scrutiny.

48 Uncle Donnie Takes on the World
The FIS World Cup is the top alpine ski circuit on the planet and, as David Donaldson ’13 is discovering, it comes with a steep learning curve.
By Tim Etchells ’74

Kate Manning’s second novel is every bit as good as her stunning debut.

p. 60
Upcoming Events

Reunion June 6-8
Catch up with your Middlebury classmates and friends over a fun and festive weekend. Bring your family or a friend!

Alumni College August 28-31
Plan an end-of-summer getaway to the beautiful Bread Loaf campus and explore fascinating subjects with some of Middlebury’s best teachers. (Parents and friends are welcome, too!)

35th Annual Alumni Golf Tournament September 6-7
In honor of Gordon C. Perine ’49
Not just for alumni!
Parents are encouraged to participate, and bring family and friends along. Housing is available at Bread Loaf.

Middlebury
For more information, please visit go.middlebury.edu/alumni or call 802.443.5183.
Read On

Living in Vermont, I am often asked what I like “to do”—the expectation being that I’ll describe some variation of skiing, bicycling, trail running, winter camping, mountaineering, or a combination of all these things. (I no doubt have a friend who has cycled her road bike up the App Gap, hopped off and trotted a few miles through the woods, scampered up the rocky face of a cliff, bedded down for the night, awakened to fresh snow, and then skied her way back down to her bike.)

What do I like to do? I like to read. That’s not to say that my friends are anti-reading (they’re probably in their winter-camping tents, headlamps blazing, catching up on back issues of the Economist). It’s just that I approach reading with the same obsession as my friend Nicole does when running 20 miles in subzero temperatures.

Need an example of my madness? I read when I walk—anywhere, anytime. The other day, I found myself walking in the road at dusk, lost in a New Yorker story on grease theft. I was only a few paragraphs into my journey—space and time being measured in paragraphs and pages when read-walking—when I thought better of my chosen route. But not my chosen “hobby.” I’ve always been a voracious reader and honestly think of reading the way other folks approach . . . whatever they love to do. (“I really want to get in two hours today.”) My wife also reads voraciously, though she draws the line at the act being an ambulatory one. You can imagine my pride last summer when the Jennings family was walking home from the Vermont Book Shop, and the seven-year-old was marching right along, face buried in The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Library (1).

So in this winter season, I encourage you to spend some quality time with your favorite read. Here’s hoping you start with this magazine.
FEATURED CONTRIBUTORS

Terry Aldrich ("Into the Woods") coached at Middlebury for 36 years, during which time his Nordic and cross-country teams won eight national championships and 11 conference championships. He didn't start hunting until he moved to Vermont, but he's now an avid, three-season hunter.

Christiane Beauregard ("Department Survey") is an extremely talented illustrator who makes her home in Montreal. She got her start in the design department of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and now counts periodicals (New York Times, Washington Post, Harvard Business Review), cultural institutions (Montreal Science Centre, Canadian Museum of Civilization), and universities (Johns Hopkins, Vanderbilt) among her many happy clients.

Juliette Borda ("Conventional Wisdom") has long been on design director Pamela Fogg's wish list to contribute to Middlebury Magazine, and the stars finally aligned for this issue's feature package, in which Midd faculty members weigh in on commonly held beliefs. Juliette's whimsical illustrations have appeared on the cover of the New Yorker and in the pages of Travel + Leisure, Smart Money, and the New York Times Magazine.

Tim Etchells ’74 ("Uncle Donnie Takes on the World") is surely no stranger to many readers of this magazine. He has twice stood atop the masthead as editor (from 1982-1986 and from 1988-1992); has contributed to our pages as a member of the communications staff; and can be frequently spotted at the Snow Bowl, on the ice in Kenya, or among the crowd at Panther sporting events. Now a freelancer, Tim once edited Ski Racing magazine and was a natural choice to chronicle the adventures of David Donaldson ’13 in this issue.

Brett Simison (Cover, "The Call of the Wild") makes very fine pictures. Once an assistant to National Geographic photographer Michael "Nick" Nichols, the Citronelle, Alabama, native is at home in the outdoors, and his work reflects this level of comfort. His work has appeared in Outside, the New York Times, Blue Ridge Outdoors, and Backpacker. He is also a frequent contributor to this periodical.

Sarah Tuff ’95 ("The Call of the Wild") writes about the outdoors (and other pursuits) for the likes of Runner’s World, the New York Times, Men’s Journal, the Burlington-alt weekly Seven Days, and Ski Racing magazine, where she is editor-in-chief.

WORTH CONSERVING

No matter where you live, this beautiful journey ("Some Kind of Place: Nuiqsut, Alaska") shows why the Arctic is vital to us all.
— OCEAN CONSERVANCY, Commenting on Twitter

DISAPPOINTED IN DIVESTMENT DECISION

President Liebowitz’s explanation of the board’s decision not to pursue carbon divestment was especially concerning for its outline of the board’s opaque investment strategy ("Divest? Not Now," fall 2013).

In describing this strategy, President Liebowitz describes how the College’s endowment is lumped with funds “made up of the commingled assets of many other clients, individuals, and institutions alike, and may be invested in domestic and international equities, bonds, private partnerships, venture capital funds, real estate, and other investment vehicles.” This reads like an echo of the unaccountable and deregulated investment strategies that contributed to the U.S. economic crises of the past five years, most notably in real estate markets.

The president, and presumably the board as well, justify this approach by pointing to the endowment’s “superb” performance and to the fact that many other institutions use this hands-off approach. Given Middlebury’s pride as a community that understands and appreciates context and consequences for the broader world, it is discouraging to find that critical conversation missing. This investment policy, ubiquitous as it might be, seems irresponsible. It appears that members of the Middlebury community now need to choose between short-term self interest and broad-minded leadership.
— JOSH WESSLER ’09, New York, New York

DANGEROUS TO DIVEST?

This letter is in response to one written by fellow classmate Bill Wallace ’61 in the fall 2013 issue regarding “Dialogue: Divest?”

I think it only reasonable that the politically correct contingent at Middlebury closely examitesize the many components that make up Middlebury's multimillion-dollar endowment fund. I would venture a guess that a substantial portion of these funds comes from industries or activities no longer considered palatable or politically correct in today's Middlebury environment. Thus, could these folks be biting the hand that feeds them?
—CLAUSS. MUELLER '61, Issaquah, Washington

WHICH MIDDLEBURY PLACES LIVE ON?
In response to the Editor's Note ("Now and Then") from the fall 2013 issue, in which the editor was soliciting nominations for Middlebury places that live on in the mind's eye, I would like to submit the Bear Restaurant, which was located on Route 7 south and was a favorite of 1957-’60 DUs for the late-night fare. In addition, this was the place after which L.D. Frasche '60 was renamed Bear—for his continued loyal patronage.
—DICK ATKINSON '60, Sunapee, New Hampshire

KUDOS, PRESIDENT LIEBOWITZ
As I was preparing a letter praising President Liebowitz, I picked up the news of his planned departure in 2015. (See p. 24.) I have always found his commentary in the Middlebury Magazine stimulating, and I am sorry he will be leaving. I wanted to comment especially about his reasoned response ("Civility, Please," fall 2013) to the inflammatory incident when U.S. flags were vandalized on the campus on Sept. 11, 2013. His appeal for civility in the face of this travesty seemed to me to be exactly the right response to the public outcry of threats and vitriolic comments that it evoked. President Liebowitz's wise counsel will be missed.
—JESSIE WOODWELL BUSH '45, Sun City Center, Florida

IN SUPPORT OF FLAG REMOVAL
Regarding the removal of American flags as detailed in the Q&A with President Liebowitz ("Civility, Please," fall 2013): I see the student who took down the flags as someone who was silencing no one. I see her as responding to an event that lacked thought. I see our native and black history as never being dealt with, a fact we are continuously reminded of.

Further, I think it was notable that the protesting student was a woman. So I see the discussions centering around "silencing" viewpoint as contrary to the point. The point is, an event was allowed without the necessary thought process. Then there was a protest by people who have unresolved histories around ancient lands and maybe, since she was a woman, around the uselessness of war.

The response to the protesters continues to place the dominate over the subdominate and the institute over the student and the well-being of the "grown ups" over the feelings of the students. I believe that the College is missing the point and has been distracted by the media attention and the anger. It's all too bad, but does show how difficult it is to present opposing viewpoints.
—REBECCA SHRIGLEY HALL, Commenting on middmag.com

A SELFISH EXERCISE
In response to Rebecca Shrigley Hall's comments, I see the student and her friends' actions as those overtly designed to create discord, vitriol, and hatred, while purporting to enlighten all of us to the plight of those without a voice in our society. The exercise was one of "look at me," something to be expected of a child seeking attention or, perhaps, the behavior of an "adult" attempting to talk over everyone else in the room. Politicians thrive on this behavior to the detriment of everyone.

The message the student was sending was that it was going to be her way because she was the arbiter of right. Ms. Hall's defense of the student because she was a woman and was representing the Abenaki's rights on sacred burial grounds is contradicted by the Abenaki chief and the contention that these issues are expanded because the student is a woman. This is the sort of disinformational diatribe that turns many listeners off. How can an intelligent group of diverse people have thoughtful and prudent conversation when the arguments are front-loaded with distracting nonsense?

The act of removing the flags was an act of vandalism on private property. I assume the two College-sanctioned groups had permission for the display. The appropriate and thoughtful approach at a protest might have been the display of the opposing point of view. That would have taken time, and instant results were the goal, even if the College was made to suffer from the negative attention.

Why is anyone surprised at the outpouring
Robert Pack's latest collection—To Love That Well: New and Selected Poems, 1954-2013—reprises many of his best known poems, both lyric and narrative, comic and meditative. The poems dramatize and reflect upon Pack's sense of mortality and loss, his cherishing of friends, family, and the natural world, and the power of poetic art to celebrate the pleasures that open to our senses and our imaginings.

MORE ON MEAD
It was delightful to read about the history of Mead Chapel ("Going to the Chapel") in the fall issue, a history I take great interest in as the great-granddaughter of Dr. John A. Mead, Class of 1864.

My grandmother, Mary Mead Hinsman, was the only child of Dr. Mead, and I have fond memories of her telling stories about her father's life, several of which I'd like to share here.

As a young boy, John Mead went fishing at Lake Bomoseen near Rutland and his hometown of Fair Haven. He caught a large fish, and while he was returning to Fair Haven, a man stopped to talk with him about his outstanding catch. The man offered to buy the fish for one dollar; John Mead accepted his offer, and, according to my grandmother, this sale was the first dollar he ever made. Later when he was a student at Middlebury, he made money to meet expenses by making sandwiches and then selling them to his classmates who were studying late into the night. He was an entrepreneur at an early age.

While he was in college, the Civil War broke out, and John became a soldier in a Vermont regiment. He and others were to board a troop train to take them south. The train was filled beyond capacity and there was no room for him inside. So he took his thick leather military belt, climbed aboard the top of the train, lashed himself to the roof with his belt, and this was the way he rode south.

He would return to Middlebury and graduate with his class and later attend medical school. After earning his MD, he opened a medical practice in Rutland, but soon became consumed with politics. He was elected the first mayor of Rutland and then the governor of Vermont. Then, rumor has it, that a Republican who was running for president approached him about running for vice president. My grandmother showed me some of the campaign buttons and other literature suggesting that people vote for him at the convention. However, it became obvious to both men that their disagreement over a particular issue was not going to be resolved, and John was no longer in the running. My grandmother had told me that this nationally known politician had been an overnight guest at their home, and while my grandmother never told me who the man was and what the disagreement was about, I believe she was talking about William Howard Taft.

My grandmother, for whom I was named, was determined that this family history should not be lost! My brothers were younger than I, so she chose me to listen. What a privilege it was!

—MARY MEAD HINSMAN RAYMOND '59, Rio Rancho, New Mexico

A NOTE OF KUDOS
I think Middlebury Magazine is outstanding. I enjoy reading it cover to cover, as does my husband, who is not even a Middlebury alum!

—LEE WEBSTER McARTHUR '51, Hilton Head Island, South Carolina

FROM MIDD TO MILIS
I am writing to pass on a Monterey postscript to the feature "And Then There Was Football" by W. C. Heinz '37, originally written in 1987 and reprinted in the fall issue.

It was especially enjoyable for those of us at the Monterey Institute to read about the gridiron exploits of 1936 Panther football captain Bill Craig '37, insomuch as he would later go on to serve in academic leadership positions at Stanford University, the Vermont State Colleges, and the California Community Colleges before being named president of the Monterey Institute of International Studies in 1980. Bill Craig served as president of the Institute for the next eight years, and his presence is still felt on our campus today in the form of the Craig Building, currently home to the Center for the Blue Economy.
Just another example of the ever-expanding web of connections between Middlebury and Monterey!
—Jason Warburg, Monterey, California

The writer is the executive director of communications at the Monterey Institute of International Studies.

WELCOME BACK
Regarding the vandalism of artwork (“Way Back,” fall 2013): As a conservator of art, I have had to take spitballs off Rembrandts, graffiti off paintings, chewing gum off sculptures, and other sundry byproducts left behind by art vandals. Drawing on such experiences, I would like to point out that sometimes the messages of vandals are not always expressions of larger philosophical stances.

Having been a studio art major on campus during this time, I can honestly say that the whole campus did not celebrate this “act of true democracy,” as another commentator stated; in fact, art majors held meetings to discuss the sad outcome.

I applaud Richard Saunders with bringing Acconci’s work back to Middlebury’s campus. I think resiting the work closer to the museum is an important step in addressing community concerns about its impact on the surrounding natural beauty, while giving those of us who wish to engage with the piece the chance to do so.

I have no doubt that most people would be surprised at what art works were considered the “monstrosities” of the past and deserving of censure. I am proud of the work I do to preserve cultural heritage, and I am grateful that Middlebury has not shied away in this challenging dialogue.
—Heather Galloway ’87, Commenting on middmag.com

The writer is a fellow of the American Institute for Conservation of Historic and Artistic Works.

KEEP PROVOKING
Glad to hear such provocative art returns to campus. The young people of today seem to be complacent in a similar way that the young people of the eighties during the Reagan era were. As a child of the sixties/seventies generation, I think it is important that students are asked to question authority in the world around them.
—John Stoner, Commenting on middmag.com
How do you spell possibility?

It's the chance to learn a new language—or brush up on an old one—at one of the most respected and successful language immersion programs in the world. With campuses in Vermont and California, Middlebury's 10 Language Schools attract business executives, government officials, college professors, and students, as well as people simply interested in the rigorous study of a language.
Prepare to Lead

Students worked with Netflix co-founder Marc Randolph to design their own innovations.

Students worked with Isabela Sa from IDEO on a strategic challenge for China Peak ski resort.

Students worked with visionary educator Chastity Lord to build a national movement for first-generation college graduates.

Students worked with four recent governors to manage a simulated public relations crisis. Christine Gregoire, former Governor of Washington State above.

MiddCORE is a four-week summer program for undergraduates and recent graduates that will change your life. This mentor-driven experiential learning program builds skills, creates opportunities and expands networks for tomorrow’s leaders and innovators.

JOIN US IN LAKE TAHOE
JUNE 2 - 27, 2014
SPACE IS LIMITED

www.MiddCORE.com
MiddCORE@middlebury.edu
Students Aiming for Top-Tier Colleges...

Complete your college applications and receive strategic college consulting with leading admissions pros:

Dr. Michele Hernandez, former Assistant Director of Admissions at Dartmouth College and author of A is for Admission

Mimi Doe, M.Ed., parenting guru and author of Busy but Balanced

- Unparalleled success rate
- Advising and facilitating every step of the way!
- Call now to reserve your space
- All Juniors: Register now for our 11th annual 4-day Boot Camp this August 2014 in Cambridge, MA!

---

THANKS, MIDD MAG

Proud to be featured in Middlebury Magazine for my Sandy-related work. Thanks @MiddleburyMag!

— @MorganAJones, Commenting on Twitter

KINDNESS IN CADILLAC

In the summer issue of the magazine, you ran a story of a student who took a cross-country trip, passing through Cadillac, Michigan (“Looking for America”). While stopping in this small town, he ran into a dilemma and discovered true kindness. He stayed at Hermann’s European Cafe and Inn and was graciously helped by the owner, Hermann Suhs.

At the end of the summer, I, too, passed through Cadillac, Michigan, and wanted to look up this kind owner. After a delicious lunch, I introduced myself as a long-ago Middlebury grad who enjoyed reading about a fellow alum’s adventure. Mr. Suhs remembered quite well the incident but had never had the opportunity to read about it in the Middlebury Magazine.

---

THE WALLET PEN®

Oprah’s Favorite Thing! MIDD 2014

Now, you always have a pen.

Www.THEwalletpen.com
Would you be able to send this gracious gentleman a copy of this issue? I thank you for extending a bit of the Middlebury spirit to this kind man.
—Laurie Davis McGrane, MA Spanish '63, Livonia, Michigan

Editors' Note: After receiving this note, we were happy to send a copy to Mr. Suhs. We will make a point to check in with him if we ever find ourselves in Cadillac, as well.

WHERE'S THE CRITICISM?
I have two comments relating to President Liebowitz's Q&A in the summer issue ("Alumni Thoughts").

First, it is nice to hear about how well Middlebury alumni regard the institution, but I'm certain there were many specific criticisms that have not found their way into the general love fest reflected in the summary—a summary so saccharine that there's really very little to take away or to provide guidance for improvement.

President Liebowitz's remarks about public speaking are well-founded—the College has itself failed in this public undertaking to say anything useful. "We love ourselves." If I were in an audience listening to this institutional hagiography, I'd have gone to sleep.

Second, there was not one word about one of Middletown's (and comparable colleges') chief problem: its obscene & limiting cost. To educate one undergraduate for one year (actually for only about eight months, the standard academic “work year”) at Middletown these days costs about as much as four impoverished American families must try to get by with for a full year. We've become a polarizing and deteriorating society, and almost everyone knows it. Middlebury has become part of the problem, and not part of the solution, though many of its idealistic young people wish that it were. Where are others’ comments on this column?
—Michael K. Heaney ’64, Commenting on middmag.com

BRAVO, FOOD GUYS
I’m so very impressed by the industry and tenacity of the students behind the nonprofit Middlebury Foods (first mentioned in “Food for Thought,” summer 2013, with a follow-up story published on middmag.com) in their efforts to make a tangible difference in Addison County. Perhaps I was ignorant to other grassroots efforts underfoot by Middlebury students when I was there so long ago, but I don’t remember any similar undertakings among undergraduates of my era. I wish I could have been involved in such meaningful work during my college years.

Thank you for your efforts, food guys! I can’t think of a worthier effort than to provide food to the hungry.
—Diane Peterson Seaborn ’90, Commenting on middmag.com

DOUBLE BRAVO
Middlebury Foods is such a wonderful project, and one that benefits everyone. The organizers are not only learning lessons as they plan and execute, their lives will be changed forever. The people who are able to purchase the “food boxes” will be nourished with wholesome foods. The farmers and other suppliers will benefit both economically and from strengthening the community. The community as a whole will benefit from the group spirit and improved health/nutrition of community members.

Congratulations to the food guys on their concept, research, ongoing effort to find ways to improve their offerings and their pursuit of a sustainable model to feed the community.
—Mary McGehee, Commenting on middmag.com
IN SYNCH ON THOREAU

Just getting through my summer issue and read the “Numbers” blurb in the letters section titled “Thoreau’s Mail Bag.” “It’s not a stretch,” you write, “to presume that Henry David Thoreau, the noted author, poet, and transcendentalist, would have frowned on social media.”

By coincidence, a couple of years back I wrote an op-ed essay for the Wall Street Journal (“Chatting with Thoreau about Twitter”) on this very topic—one that draws on quotes from Walden and other writings and imagines in an, er, tongue-in-cheek way how Thoreau might have engaged with today’s social media and handheld devices.

—Peter Mandel ’79, Providence, Rhode Island

LETTERS POLICY

Letters addressing topics discussed in the magazine are given priority, though they may be edited for brevity or clarity. On any given subject we will print letters that address that subject, and then in the next issue, letters that respond to the first. After that, we will move on to new subjects.

Send letters to: Middlebury Magazine, 152 College Street, Middlebury, VT 05753 or middmag@middlebury.edu.
With cell service at Bread Loaf now de rigueur, the old phone booth is just a relic of a bygone age.
Liebowitz Presidency to End in 2015; Board to Restructure

On an eventful day in December, President Ronald D. Liebowitz announced that he would be leaving at the end of his term on June 30, 2015, and that the Board of Trustees was revising its governance structure.

Middlebury President Ronald D. Liebowitz’s term as president will end June 30, 2015, when his current contract concludes. Middlebury’s 16th president, who has served in the office since 2004, shared his news with the College community in an e-mail at the conclusion of the December Board of Trustees meeting in New York City.

“It has been an honor of the highest order to serve as the 16th president of this remarkable institution,” Liebowitz wrote. “With its dedicated and committed staff; superb faculty, and outstanding students, Middlebury has never been stronger or better positioned for the future.”

Liebowitz noted that the institution “will continue to pursue the ambitious agenda we have set for ourselves” through the presidential transition and beyond. He stated that announcing his own transition plan now would provide the Board of Trustees with “the time necessary to select a search committee, to conduct a thoughtful search to identify the finest candidates, and, ultimately, to select Middlebury’s next leader.”

In addition to announcing his decision, Liebowitz informed the community of another important initiative that will affect the way the College is governed—a bold revision of Middlebury’s trustee structure that will go into effect July 1, 2014. While the size of the 35-member board will remain the same, how it is organized and how it approaches its responsibilities will change. In its coverage of the announcement, online publication Inside Higher Ed noted that while “some things unique to Middlebury prompted the change . . . other changes could fix an American higher ed board structure that many administrators believe is broken and unable to guide institutions ably in the 21st century.”

Among the notable changes is a reduction of 15 standing committees to six, with each carrying a range of substantive responsibilities. (The six consist of the Prudential Committee, which acts as an executive committee of the board; Trusteeship and Governance; Strategy; Resources; Risk Management; and New Programs.) In addition, the new governance structure establishes three boards of overseers—one for the undergraduate college, one for the Monterey Institute of International Studies, and one for the “Schools,” which includes the Language Schools, Bread Loaf School of English, C.V. Starr-Middlebury Schools Abroad, School of the Environment, and the Bread Loaf Writers’ Conference. These boards will be charged with focusing on the academic and student affairs operations of their respective institutions; membership will include current trustees, “partner” overseers (individuals who typically have some connection to Middlebury), and “constituent” overseers (one faculty, one staff member, and one student).

The governance changes come a year after Liebowitz and board chair Marna Whittington had initiated a review of the board’s structure and appointed a Governance Working Group to make recommendations on how the board should best be organized. These recommendations were subsequently turned into a set of proposed bylaw revisions that were unanimously approved by the full Board of Trustees in December.

For more on the changes in governance and what it means for Middlebury, please see Ron Liebowitz’s Q&A on p.32.

While there will be more opportunities—in this magazine and elsewhere—during the next 18 months to discuss the impact Ron Liebowitz has had on Middlebury, it’s worth noting several significant achievements at this time.

During his presidency, Middlebury acquired the Monterey Institute of International Studies; opened 23 new Schools Abroad sites; added 120 endowed student scholarships for financial aid and 15 endowed faculty positions; established the School of Hebrew—Middlebury’s 10th intensive summer language school—and the summer School of the Environment; sent two successful teams to the U.S. Department of Energy’s Solar Decathlon competition; inaugurated the Franklin Environmental Center for the study of the environment and sustainability; created the Center for Social Entrepreneurship; and initiated an array of programs to help students acquire leadership and communication skills and to cultivate creativity and innovation.

For context, many of these accomplishments took place against the backdrop of a deep economic crisis that began in 2007. Liebowitz guided Middlebury through that recession while maintaining a balanced budget, sustaining the institution’s commitment to need-blind admissions, and without resorting to layoffs.

He will be missed. But not for another year and a half. As he will be the first to tell you, there is still a lot of work left to be done.
“Snowflakes are drifting through the air, giving Middlebury a calm, ethereal look—and we’re all indoors stressing.”

Excerpted from an exam-week post on the student blog Middbeat. The author proceeded to offer a jazz playlist, part of a monthly series titled “BEATS,” to help lessen the stress of the season.

ARCHIVE

CHINA IN THE 1860S

Soon after John L. Buttolph III, Class of 1964, donated to the College a cache of items his great-great-grandparents brought back from China in the 1860s, one of Middlebury’s most revered faculty members went to Special Collections in the Davis Family Library to examine the objects. John Berninghausen, the Truscott Professor Emeritus of Chinese Studies, studied the stone statues, seals, inkwells, and small artworks that the Methodist-Episcopal missionaries brought back to the United States. He examined their books of Christian hymns and poems of praise translated into Chinese and imagined how Mary and Carl Martin—John Buttolph’s ancestors—might have fared in Fuzhou, China, amid the Taiping Rebellion. When his attention turned to a decorative wooden box, Berninghausen gently lifted the hinged cover. Inside he found a small piece of paper affixed to the top containing six Chinese characters. What did the slip of paper say? The first column read “Wang Qianshun,” which Berninghausen reasoned to be the name of the shop or shop owner from whom the box was purchased. And the second row of characters? Berninghausen read it as “bu er jia,” or literally “no second price.” In other words: no haggling!

While none of the items is deemed to be rare or particularly valuable, the Buttolph Collection is “significant from the perspectives of culture, religion, and life experience.”

We see these objects as a curricular resource,” explained Danielle Roupeau, the assistant curator of Special Collections and Archives. “They inform us about how missionaries lived in China, what they did, what they saw, and what was important to them.”

It was a difficult life, to be sure. The donor’s great-great-grandmother lost her husband and her infant son during their five years in China. Her older son, Edward, survived and passed the objects down to his daughter, Mabel Martin, who graduated from Middlebury in 1911. She married a classmate, John L. Buttolph, who left them to the donor’s father, John L. Jr. ’40. Now the cache, which also includes photographs and journals from the 1860s, has found a permanent home at the College.

PHOTOS BY TODD BALFOUR

Game On

ON A RECENT SUNDAY MORNING, Middlebury squash player Robert Galluccio ’15 is on Wilson Court, one of the nine squash courts that are arranged in a U-shape, perfectly framing the College’s gleaming new Squash Center.

Sweat drips from Galluccio’s face, squash ball in his left hand, racket held loosely in his right. He grips the racket more tightly. Drops the ball. Serves.

His opponent reacts, takes two steps toward the small black orb heading his way. Swings with gusto. And gets nothing but air.

“Dang it!” Seven-year-old Rory Morgan drops his head. Galluccio smiles. “Tricky one, keep your head up.”

Since the opening of Middlebury’s stunningly beautiful, 18,000-square-foot-squash facility, with its nine courts (replacing the five that were once crowded into the Bubble), expansive spectator viewing area, and tile lobby (complete with comfy chairs and a panoramic view of Kohn Field), the southeastern end of the athletic complex has been a hot destination this winter. Matches, once watched by parents and a few friends, have become a true spectator sport. An inexact survey shows that more students are playing recreationally. And then there is the opportunity to host free weekly clinics for local youngsters—Galluccio’s idea, one that wouldn’t have been possible a year ago.

Against stiffer competition, Galluccio has been undefeated in NESCAC play. Morgan bounced back, too, defeating an age-appropriate opponent 11-3.
Why I Love Beethoven
By Andrew Massey, Conductor, Middlebury College Orchestra

Praise Beethoven? I must admit, I am afraid to do so. Beethoven gets altogether too much positive press. To praise his music is to walk a narrow ledge between cliché and redundancy. Nonetheless, even as wonderful, lesser-known music languishes, his particular virtues do enrich us.

He doesn’t offer the battering rhythms of Stravinsky, the seductive miasma of Delius, or the inscrutable longueur of Messiaen. Rather, without declaring any particular target appetite, he balances contradictory human needs perfectly.

Should music be written for an audience to hear or for musicians to play? To yield exquisite moments of sensual delight or to sustain a psychologically convincing trajectory over time? These are distinct, and often incompatible, purposes. Much lush music is dull to play. Musicians can become engrossed in an interplay that, to the observing ear, sounds like nothing much. An infinite series of charming moments palls no less than unrelenting chocolate mousse, while flawless arguments often leave the soul unmoved.

Beethoven, almost perfectly in his third symphony, enlists the specific pleasures of instrumental athletics to intrigue the ear and the cumulative power of elaboration to render his conclusions devastating.

It’s not a matter of style—whether you “like” his music or not. Beethoven found the measure of the human mind. But “mind” is too small a word. He stretches, fully engages, our thoughts, emotions, our muscular structure. With Beethoven, we become awake, noticing, feeling, dancing, recognizing detail, and at last seeing the wide landscape hidden from us before.

Global Unions, Local Power from Cornell University Press

News about labor unions is usually pessimistic, focusing on declining membership and failed campaigns. But there are encouraging signs that the labor movement is evolving its strategies to benefit workers in rapidly changing global economic conditions. Global Unions, Local Power by Jamie K. McCallum, an assistant professor of sociology, tells the story of the most successful and aggressive campaign ever waged by workers across national borders.

Based on more than two years of fieldwork in nine countries and historical research into labor movement trends since the late 1960s, McCallum’s findings reveal several paradoxes. Although global unionism is typically concerned with creating parity and universal standards across borders, local context can both undermine and empower the intentions of global actors, creating varied and uneven results. At the same time, despite being generally regarded as weaker than their European counterparts, U.S. unions are in the process of remaking the global labor movement in their own image.

McCallum suggests that changes in political economy have encouraged unions to develop new ways to organize workers. He calls these “governance struggles,” strategies that seek not to win worker rights but to make new rules of engagement with capital in order to establish a different terrain on which to organize.

Capital Digs Middlebury has opened new offices in Washington, D.C. The K Street suite provides proximity to government offices, think tanks, and other research organizations for students, faculty, and staff of the College and the Monterey Institute of International Studies. In addition to work areas and a videoconferencing facility, the 6,500-square-foot suite features event space that is available for alumni gatherings and lectures.
At the Movies

Fruitvale Station, Amour, How to Survive a Plague, and Rust and Bone are just a few of the critically acclaimed independent and foreign films being brought to Middlebury in 2013–14 as part of the Hirschfield International Film Series. Conceived by Ted Perry, now Fletcher Professor of the Arts Emeritus, and later endowed by film exec Alan Hirschfield, the film series brings a little bit of Cannes, Sundance, Hollywood, and the world to campus each Saturday afternoon and evening during the academic year.

The Program
The endowed fund also supports a speaker’s series. This year, director Eugene Jarecki came to campus to speak about his documentary The House I Live In.

Behind the Name
Film executive Alan Hirschfield endowed the series in 1985. The former CEO of Twentieth Century Fox and Columbia Pictures had two children at Middlebury (Marc ’88 and Scott ’90) and was serving as a trustee of the American Film Institute with Ted Perry when he told Perry he’d like to support the College in some way.

A Few Firsts
This Is Not a Film, a documentary following a day in the life of Iranian director Jafar Panahi, is the first film to be smuggled into a film festival. Meanwhile, Wadjda is the first feature film shot entirely in Saudi Arabia—by the country’s first female director, Haifa al-Mansour.

500
Average cost, in dollars, to acquire screening rights, per film.

700
Price, in dollars, of No, the most expensive film this year. This feature film from Chile dramatizes the referendum election of Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet in 1988.

250
Price, in dollars, of the least expensive film, A Touch of Sin. The winner of best screenplay at Cannes, this Chinese film has only appeared in film festivals, to date.

To see the full Hirschfield schedule, visit go.middlebury.edu/hirschfield.
Piano Players

The young woman seated at the College’s new concert grand piano—a Steinway model D, a gift of the Ray, Meredith, and Nathaniel ‘12.5 Rothrock family—had a ponytail and wore a blue fleece, jeans, and winter boots. Beside the piano’s bench, her backpack sat in a heap.

For the past eight minutes or so, she’s been playing selections from the Broadway musical, The Lion King. The pianist brought her own sheet music and played with just her right hand. (Reviewing her performance, she said that she “hadn’t played in a couple of years, so that was a little rough.”) And at precisely 12:20, she stopped playing, gathered her things, and left the concert hall.

As she was walking out, another young woman—Jeanie from Leyden, Massachusetts—was coming in, similarly attired, backpack slung over her shoulder.

“Hey, Caroline…”

“Hey, Jeanie, enjoy it,” Caroline said. “It’s amazing.”

What was occurring in the concert hall of the Mahaney Center for the Arts on this otherwise ordinary Monday afternoon was unprecedented. At 10-minute intervals, Middlebury folks of all levels of piano experience were coming in to play a newly minted Steinway concert grand, a musical privilege normally afforded concert pianists, composers, and otherwise serious students of music.

When the Rothrock family approached the College about purchasing a new Steinway for the concert hall, they wanted to ensure that the piano be for the College community and not just highly accomplished players. So on the second week of January—every day, from 12:00 to 1:00—students, faculty, and staff responded.

Jeanie, who followed Caroline, expressed anxiety about performing in public; she won’t even play the piano in the Château for fear of passersby stopping and listening. But, she said, she couldn’t pass up this opportunity. For her 10 minutes, she played a beautiful rendition of Paul Halley’s “Piano Song”—a gorgeous, rich sound filling the hall.

Minutes after she finished, a young man bounded onto the stage—“Hi, I’m Harrison!”—sat down at the keys and launched into a rousing version of “Georgia on My Mind.”
In Memoriam
James Isbell Armstrong, the 12th president of Middlebury College, passed away on December 16. He was 94 years old. In this photograph, taken shortly after Armstrong assumed office, the new Middlebury president gathers with his family: daughter Carol, who died in 2008; daughter Elizabeth, now an associate professor of East Asian studies at Bucknell University; son James, currently the director of choirs at the College of William & Mary; and wife Carol, who now resides in Hanover, New Hampshire. James Armstrong served Middlebury with distinction from 1963 until 1975, guiding the College through turbulent years, while building an institution that would become one of the top liberal arts colleges in the country. A full obituary appears on page 93.

Class (Almost) Half Full

Though we’re only a few weeks past the January deadline for “regular” admission to Middlebury College, nearly half of the Class of 2018 has been filled—44 percent or 287 students out of an expected class of 650 to be exact. That is the number of students who were offered early admission from a pool of nearly 700 applications. Ninety-six applicants were deferred and will be considered for regular admission in the spring; 303 applicants were denied admission.

Middlebury Dean of Admissions Greg Buckles noted that there was a stronger international applicant pool this year—“generally, international students tend to apply for regular admissions,” he said—with the College accepting 21 international applicants early decision, a 50-percent increase from the previous year. (International students represent about 10 percent of Middlebury’s student body.) Buckles noted that accepted students hail from 35 states and 19 countries. The College will award up to $3.2 million in need-based financial aid for students accepted early.

Middlebury’s early decision figures track closely with those of peer institutions. This fall, Williams College reported that it had offered early acceptance to 237 students for an expected class of 550—which amounts to 43 percent of the Class of 2018. Dartmouth College reported that it had accepted about 40 percent of its overall class early.

All acceptances offered under Middlebury’s early decision program are considered binding, which means that students who apply are signaling the College is their first—and only—choice.

Like most academic halls on campus, the Franklin Environmental Center at Hillcrest is a hub of activity during exam week. Unlike other buildings, though, Hillcrest is certified as LEED Platinum, the highest designation awarded from the U.S. Green Building Council for leadership in energy and environmental design. One can track energy and resource usage in real time, and we took a peek during the busiest—and a very cold—time of year.

GALLONS OF WATER CONSUMED
748
COST, IN DOLLARS, FOR TOTAL WATER CONSUMPTION
75
KILOWATT-HOURS OF SOLAR PRODUCTION VIA SOLAR PANELS
80
KILOWATT-HOURS OF GRID CONSUMPTION
1,466
AVERAGE TEMPERATURE IN MIDDLEBURY, IN DEGREES FAHRENHEIT
20
Department Survey

How does a building's appearance speak to its primary occupants? When considering the homes of the academic departments and programs at Middlebury, well, it all depends. Some domiciles—think le Château or Bicentennial Hall—have obvious tenants. Others have less-than-obvious ties. What follows: a sample survey of department homes.
ARTS HAVEN
Opened in 1992, the Mahaney Center for the Arts is the natural home for Dance, History of Art and Architecture, Music, and Theatre.

HUMANITIES HUB
Refurbished and repurposed in 2008, the Axinn Center at Starr Library houses American Studies, English and American Literatures, Film and Media Culture, and History.

PASSPORT, PLEASE
While other languages have spread across campus, German, Japanese, and Russian are lodged in the aptly named Freeman International Center.

WHO'S HERE?
Munroe Hall is a stately building that could really host anyone. Hebrew, Political Science, Religion, and Sociology/Anthropology call Munroe home.

A PAIR, PLUS ONE
Like Munroe, Warner is another "classic" college building. The Economics and Math departments live here. As does...Spanish and Portuguese?

THEN AND NOW
Once a local elementary school, Twilight has Education Studies under its roof, as well as Classics and Philosophy.
What led the Board of Trustees to decide to revise its governance structure?

There were many factors, but I think they fell into two categories: internal and external. Externally, the world has changed dramatically since Middlebury, and its board in particular, has had a chance to step back and review the way in which it governs itself. The business of higher education has become infinitely more complex. Colleges and universities today face an array of challenges, from important questions of cost and competitiveness to applications of technology and issues relating to the management of large endowments, just to name a few. These require strong governance structures.

Looking at Middlebury internally, we haven’t made many substantive changes to how we are organized and how we run things in the past 50 years. But in that time this traditional, small, residential liberal arts college has been transformed into something quite different. In the 1960s, we had 1,200 students; now we have 2,500. We had about 80 or 90 faculty; now we have almost 300. Geographically, we were overwhelmingly a local, Vermont institution. The Bread Loaf campus was the farthest extension of the College, save for a small number of programs for our Language School graduate students in France, Spain, and Italy. Now we have operations in almost 40 sites around the world. One of those is a graduate school in Monterey, California, with almost 700 students.

These internal changes required us to step back and ask some critical questions: Is our board organized in the best way possible to know what it needs to know about this dynamic institution? And is it properly positioned to guide Middlebury through what many have said are likely to be turbulent times going forward? Our trustees carry the ultimate responsibility for the long-term well-being of the institution. Understanding this, it made sense to ask the fundamental question of whether our current board governance structure was helping the trustees be good fiduciaries of the institution.

We’re fortunate that we are undertaking these adjustments from a position of strength. The College has never been stronger, and it has a great future. But we can’t sit back and not engage in the broader issues affecting higher education. We thought now would be a good time to make this governance change.
Tell us about the process, how long it took ... The process began shortly after the College’s 2011 ten-year reaccreditation review. That was an important driver because the review highlighted just how complex Middlebury had become. And it noted that our governance structures in some cases hadn’t kept pace. In the summer of 2012, I wrote a lengthy letter to the faculty about the dual challenges of cost and relevance in higher education. I think that also played a role in the decision to move forward. Trustees began asking the question that so many outside the academy are asking: Why is higher education so expensive, and are students and families and supporters of our institutions getting all that they should for that type of investment? Are there ways to control those costs? The other key issue from that letter had to do with relevance. Is a BA degree the same today as it was 200 years ago, 100 years ago, 50 years ago? Or do we need to start thinking differently about higher education, especially within the context of the changing, more competitive global environment? Are our graduates getting an appropriate mix of theoretical and hands-on applications given the realities of their post-college lives?

The combination of the reaccreditation review and the letter to faculty led to a series of discussions, influenced by the impact of the 2007–10 recession. The vulnerability of even the most wealthy private educational institutions cannot be dismissed and certainly affected how we assess risk and how we think about governance. It was largely these issues that led Marna Whittington, our board chair, and me to engage the trustees on a process that would allow them to better understand—and engage more meaningfully—the emerging trends in higher education and the demands placed on Middlebury.

In these conversations, we thought about governance in many ways. We thought about faculty governance. We thought about trustee governance. We thought about broader institutional governance. We decided that it made sense to start with the Board of Trustees due to the role it plays as the fiduciary body of the institution. We engaged an educational consultant, well known in higher education and familiar with Middlebury, and together we created a process that would identify what we wanted to achieve and how we would go about achieving it.

This led to the appointment in the fall of 2012 of a governance working group, which included veteran trustees, two faculty members, and two staff members. Marna and I laid out a charge for the group, which was to think broadly and long-term—and not to be afraid of bold change.

Two notable changes in the governance structure were paring the 15 standing committees down to six, while making them broader in scope, and creating three boards of overseers—one for the undergraduate college, one for the Monterey Institute, and one for the “Schools.”

What will this mean for the individual trustees? For many years, trustees have sat on anywhere from three to six committees, which forced us to divide up the available time into short blocks—about an hour and 15 minutes for each committee. That made it very hard to go deeply into a subject. That was a major deficiency of the old system.

The working group examined the current committees and their respective charges and reconfigured them into a smaller number of committees based on the overlap of their respective purviews. This will allow trustees to take deeper dives, to think about issues as they relate to one another rather than in isolation from one another, and to do so over a longer period of time, a three-hour block of time. The boards of overseers will work largely as program committees that relate to each of the major areas of the institution: the undergraduate college, the (graduate) Monterey Institute, and then all of the “Schools”—the Language Schools, Bread Loaf School of English, the Schools Abroad, the School of the Environment, and the Bread Loaf Writers’ Conference. And, I suspect, future endeavors we may pursue.

Each trustee will sit on one standing committee, which will meet for three hours in the morning, and one board of overseers, which will meet in the afternoon, also for three hours. What will it mean for these trustees? We expect the experience will be one of greater focus. Their committee work will probe more deeply into the issues and questions facing the institution. We know from our trustee surveys that this is what they want. They want to be more of a “doing board” rather than a “listening board.” They believe that by developing more expertise and a deeper understanding of the issues, they will be better fiduciaries for the institution.

What is the charge given to the overseers? They will focus on curriculum and academic programs, the quality of the student experience, fundraising, and those unique characteristics and qualities that distinguish each of our programs. The College board of overseers will do this for the undergraduate College, which is the core of our identity as an institution. The Institute board will focus exclusively on those same issues as they pertain to Monterey. And so on.

The overseer boards will vary in size, but trustees will comprise a majority of each. The College board will have 18 sitting trustees, the Monterey Institute board will have 9, and the Schools board will have 8. And then every one, two, or three years, trustees will rotate from one board to another so that over a five-year term or even a 15-year or lifetime term, each trustee will become much better acquainted with each of our programs. In addition, each board will have “partner” overseers and “constituent” overseers. Partner overseers will be individuals who have particular expertise or who are invested in the institution in some meaningful way. Constituent overseers will be students, faculty, and staff who will bring their own unique perspective to the membership. Each board will have one student, one faculty, and one staff member as constituent members. The inclusion of non-trustees brings diversity of experience and expertise to these boards, which I think is crucial.

Overseers will make recommendations that will then flow into the appropriate committee on the standing side. If one has a proposal for staffing or for a new program, that would go from the overseer committee to a standing committee or to the full board. All board-level decisions will ultimately be made by the full board, after recommendations come from the board of overseers or from a standing committee.

The creation of the boards of overseers is really quite significant for the institution. Historically, trustees—most of whom attended Middlebury as undergraduates—have tended to focus their attention overwhelmingly on the undergraduate experience. The complexity of Middlebury today demands we broaden that focus. Fortunately, our trustees are eager to learn more about the Monterey Institute, the Language Schools, Bread Loaf, etc. They are eager to engage issues pertaining to these areas of Middlebury. That’s another great benefit of the new structure.
The Call of the Wild

What does it mean to be a Middlebury student—and a dedicated hunter?

At 5:15 am on opening weekend of Vermont's rifle deer-hunting season, the Mobil Short Stop at the corner of Commerce Street and State Route 116 in Hinesburg is the province of pickup trucks and bearded, camo-clad guys buying coffee from Joanne, the affable cashier who wishes the hunters good luck.

Then there's John Montgomery '14, who has a monogrammed bag in the back of his Suburban with Texas plates. A varsity lacrosse player and an international politics and economics major, he already has a job lined up in energy-investment banking in Houston.

But right now, Montgomery is after something even more elusive than gainful employment after graduation: a 12-point buck that's been seen wandering through a marshy meadow not far from this Mobil station.

Yes, Montgomery is a serious hunter. And he's not alone at Middlebury. In little pockets around campus, students and faculty members are waking up in the dark to pull on orange caps, load up rifles, and pursue wild animals.

Some, like Montgomery, have been doing this their entire lives; others have picked up hunting as first-years because it's the most sustainable way to consume meat at Middlebury. They are part of a massive rebound in hunting culture across the United States—according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, wildlife-related outdoor recreation jumped "dramatically" from 2006 to 2011, with nearly 14 million people now hunting.

And in Vermont, the state's laws are some of the most hunter friendly in the nation, explains Pat Berry '91, the Commissioner of Vermont Fish and Wildlife. "Vermont is founded on the theme of the commons, which is that, yes, land is owned by individuals, but there's a sense of community and shared ethics around communal land use," says Berry. He points to Lake Champlain, the Green Mountain National Forest, and the Dead Creek Wildlife Management Area as rich hunting resources in close proximity to the College. Today, hunters spend nearly $300 million in the state, which ranges first among the lower 48 states in wildlife-related recreation rates. Just witness Governor Peter Shumlin grinning over the six-point, 186-pound buck he bagged in East Montpelier in November.

Greg Buckles, the Middlebury dean of admissions and longtime hunting and fishing guide, says that when he arrived in the community from Ohio in 2008, he was pleasantly surprised to find how much of an ethical and responsible hunting culture existed at Middlebury. "It's a low-key, natural way of life," says Buckles. "Many more people than I ever could have expected hunted. I'd not seen that before in my 30 years in education, where a progressive, academic community coexisted peacefully with a hunting lifestyle."

Self-reliant, committed—and culinary wizards with game—College hunters just may be part of the most ecologically minded and coolest (if most socially complicated) unofficial club at Middlebury. It's one that has fostered friendships with the greater Vermont community and one that teaches lifelong skills about hard work—respect, mortality, time management, and discovering joy and gratitude. "Everybody goes and hikes Snake Mountain," says Montgomery of his non-hunting fellow students. But it's another level of commitment to get up "at 3 am to go..."
We both work in the dining halls,” says Kamisher-Koch, an American goose, it’s local and sustainable and free-range—whatever label you want happy right up to the end, and that feels good.”

I think that there are some really misguided perceptions among people who are not from a rural setting and simply don’t understand hunting and have prejudged it,” says Berry. (While all of the students interviewed for this story were comfortable speaking about their hunting experiences, not all faculty and staff were. One longtime hunter asked not to be identified and spoke of hunting companions who wish “to stay fairly closeted, if you will, for fear of push back from colleagues.”)

This troubles Berry. “Hunters play a critical role in wildlife conservation management; there’s a tremendous ecological value,” he explains. “I think people misunderstand the hunting culture, which is easy to do if you ever turn on any of the hunting shows. Hunting is one of the safest activities; there are fewer incidents of accidents with hunting as a sport than most outdoor activities.”

Hunter-safety education is a prerequisite for a Vermont hunting license, and hunters such as Montgomery and Alex Cort ’14, who grew up practicing target sports while at summer camp in North Carolina, have years of experience under their belt. Those students new to hunting describe an intensive learning experience—state-sanctioned classroom and field-study courses must be completed before being issued a hunting license. Hunting rifles, shotguns, knives, bows, and archery supplies must be registered with the College’s Department of Public Safety and either stored there or at an off-campus facility.

“Some people might look at you like you’re doing something bad, but there’s not too many of those,” says Montgomery. “The majority think it’s neat or cool; they just don’t understand it.”

Cort recalls a time when he returned to his suite with four dead geese in plastic garbage bags, and the reaction from his roommates was “wow, that’s a lot of dead birds.” Most of his friends are on board with his hunting, he says, though he also takes pride in how his extracurricular activity can set him apart and allows him to interact with non-Middlebury students.

Hunting was much more the norm a few decades ago, says Detwiler, not just a habit, but a way to get off campus and meet people in the community, outside the Middlebury bubble.”

Hunting and education can dovetail in surprising ways. Plucking feathers is the “biggest pain in the ass, beyond belief,” says Kamisher-Koch, but gutting an animal, be it a smelly, fish-eating merganser or a six-point buck, means an instant anatomy lesson. Her sights set on medical school, the Seattle-raised Honican is a neuroscience major. And that, too, syncs up with the lesser-known side of hunting, a cerebral challenge that involves strategy, commitment, planning, and dedication.

Despite all this, Lauren Honican ’15 and Myles Kamisher-Koch ’15 became hunters as Middlebury students in order to source their own meat. “We both work in the dining halls,” says Kamisher-Koch, an American studies major from Newton, Massachusetts, as he nibbles on bread and cookies and sips a milky glass of iced tea in Proctor’s lounge. “You get a different perspective on a chicken breast after you process 200 pounds of them and see how they came packaged. When you shoot a migratory goose, it’s local and sustainable and free-range—whatever label you want to apply to it. Hopefully humane. I think that [the goose] was pretty happy right up to the end, and that feels good.”

At Brooker House, where they live, Honican and Kamisher-Koch have commanded much of the freezer space for the game they’ve shot since sophomore year. “Didn’t we both get our first ducks in the same flock at the same time?” Honican asks Kamisher-Koch. “We both shot, and to our surprise, two ducks just dropped out of the sky.”

“Mergansers,” says Kamisher-Koch.

The couple made merganser jerky, not nearly as good as the smoked goose sausage or the goose-meat marinara sauce they whipped up recently.

I F THINGS GO THE RIGHT WAY FOR MONTGOMERY during his deer hunt in Hinesburg, he’ll be bringing a buck back to Vermont Field Sports on Route 7 in Middlebury, where a bright orange sign on the door reads Big Game Reporting Station. Lined with Browning shotguns and rifles, bows, Johnson Woolens, and boxes upon boxes of ammo, it’s the starting and ending point for many a Middlebury hunting expedition.

Jon Detwiler ’86 remembers when Vermont Field Sports was in the little red schoolhouse across the road, where there was a pot-bellied stove and a fraction of the space. Still, he could find everything he needed for hunting duck, or rabbit, or squirrels, even raccoon.

Hunting was much more the norm a few decades ago, says Detwiler, now a general contractor in Norwell, Massachusetts. “One of the primary reasons I went to Middlebury was because of the access to the hunting environment—vast tracks of land where you could just walk from campus or go for a short drive and immediately be able to immerse yourself,” he says.

When it comes to supporting hunters, Middlebury pales in comparison to institutions such as the University of Wisconsin-Madison and Oregon State, where there are organized hunting expeditions for deer and turkey, and to Michigan State, where the Boone and Crockett Club has been around since 1887. Dartmouth, meanwhile, has a student club called Bait and Bullet and produces a brochure with guidelines for hunting on the college’s grant land, a 27,000-acre wilderness. Williams College welcomes hunters to its teaching and research forest.

Still, says Dean of Admissions Buckles, if you want to be a hunter at Middlebury, you can. “We have a much stronger hunting and great-outdoors heritage and history than other comparable liberal arts colleges in the East,” he says.
It's somewhere around 6 AM in Hinesburg, a bright shooting star now a distant memory, the sky slowly lightening into a series of grey-on-grey smudges, and the only sounds the whoosh of distant cars. Having spread doe urine around the site, Montgomery sits in the mud at the edge of a field that he spent an hour scoping out yesterday. That's part of his typical deer-hunting routine, which also may involve a tabletop nap at the nearby UVM library in between early morning and late-afternoon outings.

Montgomery's been handling guns since age four, going after everything from pheasant, duck, and grouse here in Vermont to boar in Montana. An antelope hunting trip to Wyoming earlier this season yielded 43 pounds of meat that Montgomery still cooks up for pals on Tuesday taco nights. “It takes about 30 minutes to gut a deer,” he says, shrugging off the process. 30-06 rifle that Montgomery cradles between his legs? He used that to help keep it clean. She carries a knife, bullets, and extra layers in her pocket, plus a small blanket. Hunting can be cold and uncomfortable in mid-December.

While studying abroad in Madrid, he worked part-time for a hunting outfitter he hooked up with during a safari trade convention in Dallas. The .30-06 rifle that Montgomery cradles between his legs? He used that to kill a bear on Vancouver Island. “Hunting is complete delayed gratification,” says Montgomery, who loves the adrenaline rush but admits that he's never gotten a deer in Vermont. “But the rush and excitement make every single hair stand up on your head.”

A few days after Montgomery walks out of the Hinesburg meadow with no deer, Katie McFarren ’14 is determined to have better luck near Snake Mountain. She's been here before with Terry Aldrich, her cross-country coach, but this will be her first solo venture into the woods with a .243, which has plastic wrap around the muzzle to help keep it clean. She carries a knife, bullets, and extra layers in her pack, plus a small blanket. Hunting can be cold and uncomfortable in myriad ways.

“I feel kind of silly,” admits McFarren. “I have a general idea of where the deer are and how they move, but I just haven't had any real experience picking out my own spots that much.”

Though feeling under the weather earlier this Friday morning, McFarren, a biochem major who's committed to volunteer with an ambulance crew in Costa Rica next year, has rallied by 2:30 PM. She's planning to return tomorrow morning, maybe in the afternoon, all day Sunday, and possibly Monday morning and evening before Thanksgiving break. “I've seen deer, but never in the right context,” she says.

Several days later, Honican will explain how just being out on Lake Champlain at sunrise is rewarding—looking at the light on the bridge at Crown Point, listening to the flocks of birds overhead. “Even those geese way above you that are not within shooting range,” she will say, “you can still hear the velocity of their wing spans going past you.”

McFarren likens hunting to hiking in the backcountry for a couple of days, becoming attuned to the rhythms of nature, what the mountains can offer and what you can give back. “It's really nice in the East because you get to take an hour and a half or so and just become part of the woods,” the Nevada native says. “It's a symbiotic relationship and it seems that way in the woods, too, where you sit for 15 minutes or so, and the squirrels forget that you are there, and the birds don't care anymore, so you can just become part of it. Everything exists there because it does, and it's kind of cool.”

On December 4, Montgomery pushes out from a boat launch on Lake Champlain with his friend Terry Wilson, the Vermont-based owner of wing-shooting gear company Ugly Dog Hunting. It's a mostly windless morning, with at least 70 birds in flight and decoys bobbing on the surface, good enough for Montgomery to take one duck, a goldeneye—a whistler with black and white plumage—back to Middlebury.

Still, Montgomery feels it should have been more (was the boat making too much noise?). One duck is not good enough for the dinner party that he has planned for about 10 friends, so he supplements the bird with some wild Alaskan salmon.

The friends he's cooking for are not fellow hunters, but it's not hard to imagine that a few years from now there might be more students in Montgomery's shoes. While prospective students aren't necessarily seeking out Middlebury specifically for hunting, says Buckles, the culture fits with “a larger sense of appreciation for the natural environment and all that our special location in Vermont offers…” That many then turn out to be hunters is a bonus for them.

A few days later, Montgomery roots around the kitchen cupboards for some rosemary, pepper, olive oil, and a McCormick's spice rub and now sears the duck on high heat as a friend pulls Olivia's Organics salad mix, cherry tomatoes, and Vermont Creamery goat cheese from the fridge and begins slicing up green peppers and half an avocado. A bottle of Middle Sister pinot grigio sits on the maple table.

There's a Christmas tree decorated with gold balls and candy-cane dotted bows, and photo-booth shots on the fridge. It's exam week, and the group assembling here is on the cusp of not only J-term but also life permanently outside the Middlebury bubble. Dessert, to follow the duck, will be Sour Patch Kids.

The juxtaposition brings to mind a moment that Montgomery shared while hunting in Hinesburg, the memory of shooting his first deer at age six. He was hooked.

“But when you look at the face … and I saw the eyes, it was really sad,” said Montgomery. “It showed me how precious life is, how it is such a balance between nature and man. I realized that the deer was not that much older than me.”

Later on, Detwiler becomes choked up, speaking over the phone from Norwell, where he's built a life around hunting. He has met his best friends, including, at the age of 45 (more than two decades after the typically deepest bonds made at Middlebury), Berry.

“The killing of an animal is very rarely a pleasurable experience and sometimes can be heart wrenching,” says Detwiler. “All these emotional factors that come into play have made me a better person, a more sensitive person, a person more respectful of the land, of animals, of people. There's a philosophy of life that is shared among serious outdoorsmen and sportsmen that the world is bigger than us.”

Sarah Taff ’95 woke up very early on more than a few occasions to join the hunting parties featured in this story. On the other hand, she was also treated to a few delicious homemade meals for her effort.
Conventional Wisdom

People like to trot out “conventional wisdom” in conversation, often to win an argument or make a point, but also to affirm what almost everyone believes. But just because most people believe something doesn’t necessarily make it so; that’s the very definition of “conventional wisdom”: a body of ideas or beliefs generally accepted as true by the public, but also largely unexamined.

With an entire faculty at our disposal, we thought it would be interesting to ask professors about perceived truths in their respective fields of expertise, offering them the opportunity to affirm or debunk commonly held notions. They didn’t disappoint.

Illustrations by Juliette Borda
The Fourth Amendment requires government to justify to a court why it has a compelling interest in your personal information. It protects the contents of your home computer from illegal search and seizure, but once you post something anywhere in the cloud, you lose that protection. Virtual reality has rendered ambiguous just where Fourth Amendment protection ends. And NSA surveillance of foreign populations has antagonized our allies.

Now add the 2001 Patriot Act, which lowered the barriers to legal surveillance by allowing the secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court to review individual requests to suspend privacy rights, and you have an expanded license for surveillance that motivated Edward Snowden to leak what the NSA had been doing in pursuit of homeland security. To date, none of the NSA’s activities have been found to violate the letter of the law. While it found “persistent instances of noncompliance,” the White House panel that has urged President Obama to rein in NSA data mining found no “illegality or other abuse of authority.” One federal judge has ruled that some NSA practices are likely to be unconstitutional. Another has reached the opposite conclusion. Technology’s inexorable collision with existing law is likely to require Supreme Court resolution.

Our dazzling technological gadgets and the next frontier of cloud computing are products just like our kitchen appliances—with one critical difference. You do not need to know how your refrigerator works to stay free. With the cloud, it turns out you do.

Conventional wisdom highlights the promise of the Internet for strengthening American democracy and innovation. In eliminating gatekeepers, the Internet gives everyone a voice. Social media tools, such as Twitter and Facebook, empower the weak by making political organization easier. If Washington could only harness the power of Silicon Valley properly, it could gain better solutions to a host of public-policy problems, the sputtering launch of the website for the Obama Administration’s new health initiative being a recent example. Technology empowers individuals, but what many Americans miss is that technology is a double-edged sword that can also undermine rights.

The ongoing transition to cloud computing provides a good example. Cloud computing is not new. Anyone who uses Google has experienced the power of cloud computing. You type a term into your search engine and get instant results. But your personal computer does not house the algorithms and computing power that returns a result to you. For most Americans, Google or Yahoo does. With cloud computing, servers somewhere else do the heavy lifting, not your own device.

What is new in cloud computing is the scale. The major technology companies envision a future in which all computing power and related applications would no longer be something the consumer owns. Instead, all the user will need to access vast computing power is a web browser and a password. Now owners will become renters.

Inexpensive and powerful cloud computing potentially serves the interests of consumers, companies, and democracy alike. What most consumers do not realize, however, is that whatever aspect of their life they store in the cloud does not have the same constitutional protection as the same information stored in a drawer at home.
CW: Your Child Could Paint That

Sure, she might not be the next Jackson Pollock, but that doesn’t mean she shouldn’t try, writes Jim Butler.

We’re all familiar with certain clichés about art, particularly “abstract art.” The phrases “that’s no more than chicken scratch” or “looks like something my six-year-old could have done” come to mind. But what actually separates real art from arbitrary dabbing? I encounter this essential question teaching foundation drawing classes to Middlebury students, most with no previous formal training in visual art.

“Drawing,” 19th-century French artist Jean D. Ingres wrote, “is the probity of art.” He meant drawing (graphical marks) forms the irreducible syntax of visual communication. Humans, at various times, codified that syntax to create visual languages unique and meaningful to their needs. For example, cave artists of Lascaux invented drawings that vividly spoke to audiences of our distant forbears. Likewise, the colorful, fractured brushwork of Impressionism aptly mirrored a bourgeoisie with newly found leisure time 100 years ago. Creating new visual language is ongoing, helping us define our own time.

My students learn that drawing is what I call “a record of the hand”—a physical analog of the artist’s intellectual projection. Learning how to construct a visual language is not easy (though all can do so), and the curve can be steep. One early exercise asks students to make pencil marks, such as dots, to represent coordinates in observed space. Being smart, many quickly intuit if their “chicken scratch” could represent a door across the room, the inverse could be true. That and other principles of drawing (perspective, value, scale) are fully understood only by learning through trial, error, critique, and remaking. But once learned, comprehension of drawing opens oceans of art images to be deeply understood, including abstract paintings.

A student who recently returned from the Museum of Modern Art said to me, “Professor, now I get Jackson Pollock . . . It’s so cool to see how I’m dripping paint the same way he did to make my landscape.” As I nodded in agreement I thought to myself, “Yes, your child could definitely paint this . . . if he knows how.”

Jim Butler is a professor of studio art and one-half of the artist team The Civil Hand. Jim’s work can be viewed at www.jimbutlerfineart.com.

_____________________

CW: Gravity Does Not Exist in Space

You’ve been led to think that, but it’s not true, explains Rich Wolfson.

There’s no gravity in space, right? Isn’t that why astronauts float around weightlessly? You may have seen Sandra Bullock do just that in Gravity, or Tom Hanks in the earlier Apollo 13. And if you read the first version of Joanna Cole’s The Magic School Bus Lost in the Solar System, one of Ms. Frizzle’s pupils told you, “there’s no gravity in space.”

But there is gravity in space. Without it, astronauts and their spacecraft would go off in straight lines, obeying the law of inertia and leaving Earth’s vicinity forever. As Isaac Newton recognized more than 300 years ago, what gravity does is pull spacecraft and their astronauts continually out of the straight lines that they “want” to follow, bending their paths into closed orbits. So there better be gravity in space. At the altitude of the International Space Station, in fact, gravity is almost as strong as it is here at Earth’s surface.

So why the “weightlessness”? Because, as Galileo showed, gravity gives all objects the same acceleration, regardless of their mass. Astronauts, their spacecraft, and everything else up there with them have the same acceleration and follow the same orbit. So these things don’t accelerate relative to each other, and that makes them seem “weightless.” You can experience the same “weightlessness” by jumping off a stool; for a brief moment you don’t feel the heaviness of gravity, and if you drop an object it falls right alongside you—thus floating freely relative to you.

Astronauts’ “weightlessness” isn’t the absence of weight but “apparent weightlessness” that results from being in free fall—the state where gravity is the only force acting. It doesn’t matter whether you’re falling toward Earth or around Earth in an orbiting spacecraft; either way, you feel “weightless.” So, about The Magic School Bus: The newer version gets it right, thanks to my writing the author when, decades ago, I was reading the book to my daughters. And about those movies: Sandra Bullock’s apparent weightlessness was faked with special effects, but Tom Hanks’s was real: The studio rented NASA’s “Vomit Comet,” an airplane that executes maneuvers that put it effectively in free fall—giving a half minute of apparent weightlessness.

Rich Wolfson is the Benjamin F. Wissler Professor of Physics.
C W: Faith and Reason Are Polar Opposites
Not really, writes James Calvin Davis.

Among religious believers and nonbelievers alike, it's common to hear it taken as gospel that faith and reason are polar opposites. Many believers subscribe to this dichotomy in order to celebrate the superiority of faith; an appeal to human rationality, after all, is to trust in the human rather than the divine. For their part, religion's cultured despisers often assume that convictions of faith fail the requirements of rational discourse. To quote the late Richard Rorty, faith is a "conversation stopper," because it appeals to an authority (God) that isn't universally recognized, whereas reason represents an appeal to an authority that all humans can know as objective and reliable.

The assumption that faith and reason are in conflict derives from the Enlightenment, that laudable attempt to emancipate Western intellectual culture from the grips of religious hegemony. But the assumption misrepresents reality in two important ways: On the one hand, it underestimates the logical structure of many theologically based convictions. Some of the premises at the heart of religious convictions may be unprovable by rational appeal, but the arguments built on these premises are at their best logical, philosophically informed, and rationally compelling. On the other hand, the dichotomy underestimates the degree to which modern science and philosophy themselves are built on premises, biases, and priorities that are subjective assumptions, rather than objective derivatives from some "pure reason."

Complicating the simple dichotomy of faith versus reason has important implications for American public discourse. It invites religionists to use the resources of their traditions to articulate convictions in rationally comprehensible ways, rather than relying on simple invocations of authoritative texts or divine will. But questioning the dichotomy also challenges the religious skeptic to recognize rationality at work in many religious contributions to public debate, to critically engage those perspectives (instead of dismissing them), and to keep the conversation going.

James Calvin Davis is a professor of religion and the author of In Defense of Civility: How Religion Can Unite America on Seven Moral Issues that Divide Us.

C W: Zero Is an Even Number
It sure is, though people haven't always thought so, writes Peter Schumer.

The very concept of zero as a number—much less an even number—was not clearly established until approximately a millennium and a half ago, while the history of mathematics itself extends well back before recorded history. The idea that objects can be counted by placing them in a one-to-one correspondence with a pile of pebbles or the notches on a stick dates back at least 30,000 years, as supported by archaeological evidence from Africa, the Middle East, and Europe. Eventually names were associated with such quantities. Even our mundane number 1 might have taken some time to be considered a number. Consider the sentence, "There are a number of deer in my back yard." Certainly we are not referring to spotting just a single deer.

Zero, being the lack of some positive quantity, seems even more elusive. In fact, there are two meanings attached to zero, each having its own circuitous history. One meaning is the sense of emptiness or the lack of something, while the other is the more subtle use of zero as a place-holder. In modern times, we have no trouble distinguishing between the numbers 26 and 206, but such distinctions were not as straightforward for the ancient Babylonians who used repetitions of their wedge-shaped cuneiform writing to express numerical quantities. (By the way, the oldest extant artifact containing a symbol representing the number zero is a Cambodian stone dated 683 CE, where zero is denoted by a dot.)

Now to our main point: The idea of fair division is another ancient concept. Dividing a quantity of grains or coins evenly must have been a common need. If an equal apportionment could be made, then the number was even. If the piles were uneven, then the number was odd. In this way, the parity of any integer could be determined. Clearly, a pile containing no items can be evenly divided into two equally empty piles. Hence the number zero is certainly an even number.

Peter Schumer is the Baldwin Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.
IF PUNDITS (AND SOME POLITICAL SCIENTISTS) ARE TO BE BELIEVED, America is a deeply and increasingly polarized nation, an image indelibly captured in the ubiquitous red state/blue state electoral maps that crop up during every national election. The major fault line, pundits tell us, is dictated by stark differences regarding moral and cultural issues. Denizens of red states are gun-toting, pickup-driving, God-fearing social conservatives who consistently vote Republican. In contrast, the tree-hugging, Prius-owning secular humanists occupying blue states are committed Democrats.

In truth, there is little empirical evidence to support this conventional wisdom. A plurality of Americans—roughly 40 percent—self-identify as moderates or as slightly liberal or conservative. Another quarter indicate that they either have not thought about their own ideology or can’t place themselves. In contrast, only about 20 percent describe themselves as conservative or strongly conservative, and the corresponding liberal numbers are even smaller, at about 13 percent. Moreover, except for a slight drop in both the number of self-proclaimed liberals and the ideologically agnostic, these proportions have not changed significantly for more than three decades.

It is the same with party identification. While the proportion of Americans calling themselves strong partisans (either Democrat or Republican) has stayed at roughly 33 percent for more than half a century, the proportion of strong and weak independents has jumped from 26 percent in 1952 to more than 40 percent today. And when we examine attitudes on hot-button cultural issues, such as abortion rights or prayer in school, surveys show that Americans’ views on these issues have scarcely budged across two decades.

So why do pundits insist that Americans are growing ever more divided? The mistake they make is to confuse a choice between two polarized candidates or issues with a polarized public. It is true that our political class, including elected officials and activists, are deeply polarized and that they frequently push extreme political agendas. As a result, Americans often must choose between two very partisan candidates and issues. That gives the appearance of a polarized nation, despite the fact most Americans are moderates. Indeed, the social values that attract so much media attention actually rank very low in voters’ priorities; instead voters are primarily concerned with bread-and-butter economic issues. Moreover, there is not much evidence indicating that “red state” and “blue state” voters differ significantly in their views on most of these controversial social issues.

A divided nation? In Washington, D.C., yes—but outside the halls of government we remain the United States.

Matt Dickinson is a professor of political science and the author of the blog “Presidential Power,” which can be found at sites.middlebury.edu/presidentialpower.

CW: The First Amendment Guarantees Unfettered Free Speech
Not even close, says Erik Bleich.

THE FIRST AMENDMENT FORBIDS Congress from making laws that abridge the freedom of speech. Most Americans believe this means that they can say whatever they want, wherever they want. But this has never been the case. Speech has long been regulated in the United States in a wide number of ways. Americans cannot lawfully incite violence, divulge state secrets, or harass their fellow citizens. Nor can they walk around residential neighborhoods shouting through a bullhorn in the middle of the night.

Americans also have fewer rights to free speech in schools and workplaces than they do in the town square or in magazines such as this one. Teenagers can be suspended and employees can be fired for saying things that would be protected speech in public venues. In addition, private companies like Facebook or media outlets like radio or television—and federal agencies that oversee them—have broad power to regulate speech on their platforms, as Duck Dynasty’s Phil Robertson found out when his homophobic statements caused A&E to suspend him briefly from the show. The market power of outraged viewers prompted the network to lift the suspension, not the First Amendment. To the extent that Americans enjoy relatively unfettered free speech in public is largely a product of 20th-century Supreme Court decisions that federalized laws which were previously controlled by states and local governments. While many Americans hold fast to the idea that free speech is a paramount value in the United States, it has always been the subject of political and legal wrangling. It’s more accurate to view our current rules as reflecting an attempt to balance the undeniable good that comes from free speech against the harms that it can sometimes produce.

Erik Bleich is a professor of political science and the author of The Freedom to Be Racist? How the United States and Europe Struggle to Preserve Freedom and Combat Racism.

CW: The Emancipation Proclamation Freed the Slaves

Not all, writes Amy Morsman. Only those held in Confederate states.

CW: Oil and Water Don't Mix

A useful rule, but it can get you in trouble, writes Molly Costanza-Robinson.

"Oil and water don't mix" conveys a binary notion of molecules as being either polar (watery) or nonpolar (oily), and of a segregated, socioeconomic scene where like-molecules intermingle but shun others. These rules allow us to understand water beading up on a newly waxed car, salad dressing separating into its layers, and the lava lamp's distinct blobs of watery and oily chemistry that mesmerize. They also explain why large nonpolar organic molecules, including legacy pollutants like DDT, accumulate in fatty tissues of plants and animals and are passed on, mother to child, via lipid-rich breast milk. (Note, though, that the many benefits of breast-feeding outweigh any risks posed by chemical contaminants.) But the fact is, molecules are not either watery or oily; they exist on a continuum to exceed its safe drinking limit by a factor of 162,000. Residents of cancer “hot spots” who drank carbon tet-contaminated water will assure you that oil and water do mix. Likewise, somewhat "oily" endocrine-disrupting chemicals (EDCs) dissolve ever so slightly out of our toys, food containers, cosmetics, and electronics into our food, drinks, and saliva. Some get inhaled on dust particles and dissolve in our lungs. In exchange for their flame-retardant and water-repellant properties and for the pleasing flexibility and rich textures imparted by plasticizers, consumers receive miniscule EDC concentrations, concentrations that nevertheless rival those of our active hormones and set our endocrine system down unintended paths. Although discounted for years as "too low to matter," scientists are beginning to link EDC exposure to early onset of puberty in girls, dropping sperm counts, cardiovascular disease, obesity, and diabetes.

So, do oil and water mix? In fact they do, at least a little—and if we’re talking about toxins or EDCs, a little goes a long way.

Molly Costanza-Robinson is an associate professor of environmental chemistry.
"Great minds think alike," the conventional wisdom goes. However, in reality, great minds hardly ever think alike—at all—they all think differently, creatively, and for themselves. In the process, they come up with original and novel solutions as a direct result of seeing unexpected connections and hidden opportunities, which they pursue with a vengeance.

Some cases in point: Abraham Lincoln, an unknown lawyer from the Midwest, assured himself the nomination for president at the Republican convention of 1860 in Chicago by positioning himself as every delegate’s second choice. And think of Wagner Dodge, the firefighter in the Mann Gulch wildfire in Montana in 1949, who, realizing he and his men were being pursued by a wind-driven firewall, managed to save himself by igniting the terrain in front of him and jumping into its burnt-out area, the fire coming up from behind him moving around him.

More recently, Steve Jobs, at a time when Microsoft dominated the personal-computer software market, approached computer design at Apple from the users’ perspective and their desire for simple and intuitive interfaces. Having taken a course in calligraphy at Reed College, Jobs wanted both hardware and software—and the outcome they generate—to be elegant and pleasing to the eye.

This also applies to institutions, including Middlebury. Nearly a century ago, Middlebury ran its first summer Language School, founded on the then-novel notion of language immersion, a notion that has since proven to be one of the best ways of acquiring foreign language competency. In 1965, conventional wisdom had it that environmental studies had no place at the undergraduate level. Well, Middlebury proved otherwise, turning its program into a model emulated at many institutions. The same happened with international and global studies, and more recently with architectural studies.

Another example: Lisa Han ’16, a sophomore interested in conceiving intuitive interfaces on the intersection between art and technology. Middlebury does not (yet!) have an academic program in design, but that is hardly stopping her: she is pursuing a self-designed (pun intended) independent scholar major in design. She will draw upon architectural studies, MiddCORE, studio art, and a full year of study abroad. She starts this spring with an independent study, charting her own course in design and technology. Clearly, great minds do not think alike!

Pieter Broucke is the director of the Architectural Studies Program. He is a professor of history of art and architecture, as well as the associate curator of ancient art at the Middlebury College Museum of Art.

For most visitors to India, a visit to the Taj Mahal is high on the list of "must-see" attractions. This extraordinary white-marble mausoleum was commissioned in 1631 after Emperor Shah Jahan’s wife Mumtaz Mahal died giving birth to her 14th child. The Taj has often been called "a love poem in stone," and tour guides will point out the foundations of another structure across the Yamuna River from the Taj Mahal, claiming that Shah Jahan was planning to build a matching black tomb for himself. (Visitors also confuse the mausoleum with a mosque.)

The Taj Mahal is, in fact, a funerary structure that houses both Mumtaz Mahal and Shah Jahan, who was buried beside her upon his death in 1666. Mumtaz was not his only wife, although she was one of his favorites. The mausoleum was designed as a commemorative shrine with gardens and reflecting pools that simulate the Garden of Paradise, and is flanked on its left by the mosque and the right by a rest house.

The tomb is adorned with verses from the Qur’an, many of which refer to Paradise and the Day of Judgment. The foundations across the river are the remains of a formal garden that further extend the plan of the Taj to include the river and its far banks in its overall design. The monument is thus a sacred space, meant to be a place of commemoration and a powerful display of imperial patronage. More than anything, it is a monument to Shah Jahan’s desire to create a physical symbol of Paradise and a lasting memorial to his belief that he was a divinely ordained ruler.

Cynthia Packert is the Christian A. Johnson Professor of History of Art. She teaches courses on all aspects of Asian art, with a focus on India.
Few make the leap from collegiate skiing to the World Cup—for good reason.
Uncle Donnie Takes On the World

Skier David Donaldson ’13 takes a leap of faith, from the carnival circuit to the World Cup

By Tim Etchells ’74, Photographs by Ted Wood
When Donaldson did get a chance to ski for Middlebury, in the 2013 season, all he did was win six carnival races:
five in GS, including the first four in a row, and one in slalom.
World Cup courses can be treacherous—a recent crash left Donaldson with a lacerated neck.
The Checklist

Because Donaldson is not a member of the Canadian national team, he is responsible for making his own travel arrangements—which includes packing. No easy task for a skier on the World Cup circuit.

1st Ski Bag  Two pairs of giant slalom skis with bindings. One pair of powder skis. (Hopefully they are required at some point). Two pairs of running shoes. One pair of Timberlands. Slalom and giant slalom poles. Weight: 67 lbs.

Bundle of Slalom Poles  Weight: 68 lbs.

Carry-on Bag  Ski boots. (Never trust an airline with these.)

Despite the cold, winter in Vermont is a season loved by many students.
Vision Quest

Dan Curry '68 can realize anything—and by realize, I mean make, build, render into being. He can turn shampoo bottles into spaceships. He can cajole friends into modeling for a recreation of the Cherry Valley Massacre of November 11, 1778 (a bicentennial commission for a museum in Massachusetts). He can paint whole universes on a single canvas if the job calls for it—or a Christmas tableau, with chimney smoke and blinking lights, for a holiday episode of Laverne and Shirley.

When Curry—a veteran visual effects supervisor/producer with seven Emmys (out of 15 nominations) on his shelf and an arm belonging to Star Trek’s Borg Queen in his workshop at his home in Studio City, California—enrolled at Middlebury nearly half a century ago, he had “no idea” what he was going to do professionally. “There was a movie theater on our corner growing up, and I began drawing storyboards for imaginary movies before I knew what storyboards were,” says the Bellerose, New York, native. “When I played with toy soldiers, I wasn’t playing war—I was playing making movies about war.” When he saw The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad in 1973, “there was a little display in the lobby about how Ray Harryhausen did the effects, and I said, ‘I think I can do that.’”

Coming to Middlebury on scholarship, from a high school more accustomed to dealing with parole officers than admissions officers, “I didn’t realize how incredibly good it was,” Curry says. Chandler Potter, who taught production design for theater, was an important influence; and a Midd production of Desire “opened my eyes for what live theater can be—the settings were very abstract, but they were so right on for the tone of Tennessee Williams’s play.”

After Curry graduated with a fine arts major and a theater minor in 1968, he joined the Peace Corps. He built little farms and bridges on the banks of the Mekong, “which actually had a positive impact on people’s lives,” and designed a nearby marketplace. He experienced Thai village culture just as it had existed, unchanged for centuries, “before The Flintstones was dubbed into Thai,” he says.

Fast-forward a decade or so to graduate school at Humboldt State University, where Curry pursued an MFA in film and theater. A one-man show of his paintings caught the eye of visiting lecturer Marcia Lucas (an Oscar winner for editing then-husband George’s Star Wars). She referred Curry to Universal Studios, which was looking for artists who could do photo-realistic work in oils—“because in those days there were no computers”—so he moved to Los Angeles, joined the Illustrators and Matte Artists Union, and went to work on Buck Rogers in the 25th Century and Battlestar Galactica.

Jobs in visual effects and main title design occupied much of the 1980s, until Curry got a call from Paramount asking him to supervise visual effects for Star Trek: The Next Generation in 1989. “Who wouldn’t?” he says. Curry worked on the Star Trek franchise for the next 18 years (through Deep Space Nine, Voyager, and Enterprise), eventually directing second-unit shoots and many fight sequences as well.

Then he spent a single year on Moonlight for CBS, four years on Chuck for NBC, and wrote a white paper for NASA as a member of its vision team. His latest project is a new series starring Gillian Anderson and Dermot Mulroney called Crisis, which is expected to premiere on NBC sometime after the Winter Olympics.

“Whether it’s designing a dam, or creating an oil painting, or figuring out shots for a movie, I look at it all as an extension of the same thing,” Curry says. “It’s a reaction to the phenomenon of life. And sometimes there’s greater truth in fiction than there is in reality. We are all at the center of our own imaginary universe.”

Dick Anderson is a writer in Los Angeles. He learned all about special effects through the pages of Starlog magazine before there was an Internet.
IN THE QUEUE

BOOK REVIEW

Rights and Wrong

By Blair Kloman, MA English '94

In her brilliant second novel, My Notorious Life, Kate Manning ’79 interwines historical and cultural elements to create a riveting tale of family, love, and politics that spans time and place from the 1860s into the next century.

In a prefacing note, the novel is presented as a collection of found diaries belonging to the irreverent and unflappable Axie Muldoon—aka Annie, Mrs. Charles G. Jones, Madame DeBeausacq, and, finally, the Notorious Madame X—and Manning’s facility with the nuances of language, class, and societal issues of the day yields a work that is so transporting it’s often hard to remember it’s fiction.

The novel is, in fact, based on historical events and characters, including the main character, and much of the action centers on women’s reproductive rights and abortion—issues that are just as heated and relevant today. (Manning’s first novel, Whitegirl, deftly and emotionally explored race issues in the 1990s; she is no stranger to hot topics.)

The story opens with a 12-year-old Axie and her two younger siblings—undernourished and bedraggled street children of equally struggling immigrant parents—as they navigate the downtown rubble of a New York teeming with destitution. The painful consequence of reckless and uneducated procreation is searingly clear.

Chance brings the wayward children into the path of one C. L. Brace, an actual historical leader of social reform who was instrumental in “rescuing” urchins from the streets and sending them on the “Orphan Train” to farm families in the Midwest. With the three Muldoons, he does just that, and so Axie’s journey begins.

From her teenage years as a restless orphan and doctor’s apprentice, she has catapulted into an adult life of accidental infamy. She has an ironclad will to survive, and that often becomes...
Fed Up

BY MATT JENNINGS

Jim Bruce ’96 is not calling for the end of the Federal Reserve in his documentary Money for Nothing, nor is the film a polemic in the style of Michael Moore. But the film doesn’t go easy on the Fed either.

“It questions how big the Fed has grown, what an influence it is on our stock market, the housing market, the government bond market,” Bruce told Middlebury Magazine when he was on campus this fall for a screening of Money for Nothing. “The Fed is Atlas holding up the global financial system.” And Bruce, a film editor making his directorial debut, believes that this needs to change.

Among the people who appear on screen are former and now current Fed chiefs, Paul Volcker and Janet Yellen. Ben Bernanke, Yellen’s predecessor and the sitting chair when the film was made, did not respond to repeated requests for interviews; nor did Bernanke’s predecessor, Alan Greenspan. And while Bruce would have loved to have talked to both, he acknowledges that the world has heard a lot from Greenspan and Bernanke, and it was a great opportunity to hear from other voices expressing other opinions.

One of the many challenges of making a film about the Federal Reserve is taking incredibly complex, and at times opaque, policies and ideas and distilling them for a general audience. But, says Bruce, the stakes are too high not to try.

“The Fed affects all of us. What I’m trying to do is bring the average person into the room to be a part of that conversation.”

EXCERPT

The swish of my skirts was a whisper of refinement over the parquet in the vestibule, where I removed my bonnet and glanced to the front parlor, so distinguished with brocade upholstered sofas and lace antimacassars on the backs of tufted armchairs in crimson Genoa velvet. No street rat or kitchen drab like I once was could ever hope to be crossing the wide mirrored landing where I saw myself framed in gilt, twenty-six years of age, and mistress of the house. It startled me every time, to confront Mrs. Ann M. Jones reflected like a member of the gentility. Whenever I found myself alone on the landing, I had to admire the figure cut there. Hello, and how do you do, Mrs. Jones? I said to myself. Fine thank you, yes indeed, a pleasant good day to you too, you codfish, Axie, don’t get too fond of it.

In truth I didn’t trust the mirror at Liberty Street to hold this swell picture of me very long. Ever suspicious of good fortune, I was always after thinking some fever of consumption would come in the night to steal my breath. Despite that certain procedures was going on against the law, behind closed doors, all over town, and nobody was ever arrested for it, it was sure as sin if Somebody was caught, it would be myself.
Class Acts

Directors of the Middlebury College Alumni Association (MCAA) Suzanne K. Daley '96, President • Robert V. Sideli ’77, Vice President • Zachary A. Bourque ’01, Past President • Victoria M. Baptiste ’04 • Laura L. Bozarth ’94, MHS ’94 • Michelle E. Cady ’08 • Skip A. D’Allo ’79 • Molly Shuttleworth Evans ’96 • Richard A. Hawley ’67 • Philip B. Picotte ’08 • Edward Y. Soh ’94 • Thomas D. Steinle ’84 • Wendy Russell Tracy ’95 • Gregory D. Woodworth ’81

Ex Officio Meg Storey Groves ’85, Associate Vice President for Alumni Relations and Annual Giving • Elizabeth Karnes Keefe, Assistant Dean of Language Schools and Schools Abroad • Jeffrey Stauch ’05, Director of Annual Giving 32 Cynthia Poltrack Skinner ’64 sent the sad news that her mother, Nancy Moores Poltrack, died on July 26. At the time of her death, just three months shy of her 103rd birthday, she was the oldest living Middlebury alum! Cynthia said Middlebury was very important to her mother and her classmates were a part of her life for many years. She stayed in contact with them, had mini-reunions, and shared laughter and memories.

35 Thanks to what she calls good genes and a positive attitude, Marge Clark Headley turned 100 years old on June 5. She says that must be because she doesn’t drink milk or exercise or eat vegetables! A Pleasanton, Calif., resident for more than 30 years, she recently made a move to San Diego to be near family. She and husband Fran raised two sons and one of them helped her pack and move her belongings, including a two-year-old parakeet named Sammy.

37 It is with great sadness that we must report that Marshall Sewell passed away on November 7. At Middlebury he was a Theta Chi, worked on the Kaleidoscope and for the Campus, and was an active member of the Mountain Club. His ties to Middlebury remained strong after graduating and he served the College in many ways. With a career in fund-raising, he used his skills as a class agent and reunion class agent. He used his writing skills to serve as the class secretary from 1998 until his death. For his devotion and service to the College, he received both the Class Secretary Award in 2007 and the Alumni Plaque in 2012. He will be greatly missed.

38 I am sorry to say that I could not write up any class notes for this issue because I had surgery on my writing hand! I send my best wishes to my classmates.

—Class Correspondent: Mrs. Charles M. Hall (Margaret Leslie), 100 Wake Robin Dr., Shelburne, VT 05482.

39 REUNION CLASS What is your fondest memory of Middlebury? Mine is learning to ski. I did a lot of skiing when I taught my four children to ski—and we all went over the Northeast to ski areas. I recently found a fun thing to do in retirement. I cut out parts of ads and headlines from newspapers, then I write something in response. It’s fun and I suggest it for amusement and for challenging one’s mind. For example, I recently cut out the following: “Something just went wrong.” I then wrote, “If it does, sing a song. A better day will come along.” I cut out the phrase “Ready to Serve.” My comment was “I served in WWII and would serve again if the country needed me.” Don’t forget that our 75th reunion is June 6–8. I am planning to attend.

—Class Correspondent: A. Roger Clarke (arogerclarke@aol.com), 3 Rundell Park, Rochester, NY 14607

40 We have learned from Barton Hall ’71 that his mother, Beverly Barton Hall, 95, died in mid-September in the home where she raised her family and lived for more than 60 years. An English major, she was always passionate about books, worked professionally as a librarian for decades, and had books beside her to the very last. In 1995 she published Secret of the Lion’s Head, a historical novel for adolescents told from the perspective of her husband’s grandmother, a child living at the nexus of Elizabeth Van Lew’s spy ring in Richmond, Va., during the Civil War. She was drawn to Middlebury by the late Louise Roberts Avery ’39 with whom she had been close friends since they were toddlers living next door to each other in New Haven, Conn. That friendship, and their love for Middlebury, endured a lifetime. In addition to her son, a daughter, a grandson, and several cousins attended the College. • Martha Taylor Elliot shared a Christmas 1943 story in the fall issue and here is a story from Christmastime 1944. “At our Friendship Club dinner at the church, five foreign servicemen came to tell us about Christmas in their home countries. There was a Norwegian flyer in the RAF, a private in the French army, a corporal in the Dutch army, a naval air cadet in the British navy, and an Australian pilot officer. The Australian’s English was the hardest to understand! They came on the condition that no one would ask them questions about the war. The Australian started out by telling us that they celebrate Christmas for 12 days. Each succeeding speaker celebrated fewer days in his country than the speaker before him, causing little murmurs of amusement that grew louder as they progressed. Finally one of our servicemen stood to tell them about ours and rather sheepishly mentioned we celebrate a day and a half, and that brought down the house! But the young man who made my day was the French private. The French word for Mass (as in the cathedral) is la messe. He was obviously aware of the similarity of the two words but not quite so sure of the pronunciation of our vowel. When he told us that his family attends midnight ‘Mess’ at Notre Dame Cathedral, he proudly annotated, ‘The biggest Mess in all France.’ That’s when I nearly lost my calm, courteous demeanor! There was not so much as a small snort to be heard in the room and I was proud of us.”

41 Correspondent Margaret Shaub reports: It was gratifying to receive so many responses to the letter and review I sent you regarding Those Angry Days, which spans the years 1939–1945, asking you to think back on how your own life was affected by the war. In fact there were so many responses we can’t print them all in this issue but will save some for the next issue. Space does not permit a full quotation from every letter, so I have had to edit a bit. • Wilton “Bud” Covey wrote, “At Middlebury I remember President Moody’s attempts in our daily chapel services to convince us that America should be supporting England in its desperate defense against Germany. My recollection is that his message was not enthusiastically received by the student body.” Bud recalls he was a medical student at UVM when the news of Pearl Harbor came over the radio. “Our isolationism changed quickly to patriotism. All the medical students were taken into the Army as privates, first class. There was little complaining—after all, our tuition was being paid and we were receiving a small salary. We marched between classes and around town in formation, singing the songs of the various armed services. Along with our degrees we were handed commissions as officers in the Army Medical Corps. After brief internships and short medical military training at Carlisle Barracks, we were assigned to separation centers, the war being over by that time. I went to Fort Dix, N.J., and did discharge physicals on returning veterans. So my plans to enter medical practice were delayed by a couple of years—but I was very fortunate in never having to leave my family, go overseas, or be put in life-threatening situations.” • Sally Martens Townsend wrote from the home she shares happily with husband Ira ’42 at Harvest Hill Apartment Complex in Lebanon, N.H. Following their marriage in July 1941, Ira flew for the Navy and Sally taught school. After the war they settled in Plainfield, N.H., where Ira taught math at Kimball Union Academy and stayed another 68 years! Sally commented, “Somewhere the war didn’t really do much for us and we did as usual. I know we lost friends and it was traumatic (think Edward Gignac ’42). We’re now fully retired and both kids live near so we see them a lot.” • In a letter from his home in Charlottesville, Va., Ralph Latham reminded us that he left Midd after three years in order to attend Western Reserve Univ Dental School. Immediately after the attack on Pearl Harbor, he and the other students were told if they wanted to stay in school, they would be required to enlist in the Army or Navy. Ralph chose the Navy and graduated as a doctor of dental surgery in 1943. The next step was a dental internship at Grasslands Hospital, N.Y. Ten months into the internship, his naval orders arrived: he had to report to Port Hueneme in Oxnard, Calif. This was a Navy Construction Battalion (CB) base where Seabees were trained to set up hospital units overseas. When the war was over, he was transferred to a WAVES separation center in San Francisco. In her letter from Prescott, Ariz., Frances-Jane “Jamen” Hayden Trask recalled that husband John thankfully survived two-and-a-half years as a Navy pilot in the South Pacific, doing rescue work with a PBY squadron. Said Jamen, “I lived those years with my sister Marjorie, whose husband was in the European Theater as head of a MASH unit. As I recall, the late Gerry Mosher Kister and Betty Stratton Loomis and some others and I went to work for GE doing very menial stuff for the war effort. We leased a very old, bug-ridden apartment on the wrong side of Beacon Hill in Boston. Of our male classmates who were being shipped out via Boston, I was fortunate to be able to live through those horrible war years without losing any family members. But all of us lost dear friends and lived in fear for those who were serving their country in strange places.”

As an update she added, “I am taking noncredit courses at the local community college to keep me busy. I have had to give up all my volunteer work due to hearing impairment but I am still driving and living alone.”

Our classmate Judd Hubert offered a unique perspective. “I have read the review and several others of the book. At the time of these events, I was in favor of joining forces with Churchill. I spent only a single year at the College, 1940-41, as a senior majoring in French. I had a French baccalaureate and diplomas from the Université Libre de Bruxelles. As an expatriate who had spent the previous 11 years in Europe, I could not have chosen a more suitable college than Middlebury for my reintroduction to American life. Several of the courses had a lasting influence on me as a person and as a teacher. Jean-Claude Bourcier struck me as an ideal professor of literature whose example I have tried to follow. Because of my B classification, I had to wait until October 1942, when I was drafted. I served as an interpreter for French cadets until February 1946. While studying for a PhD at Columbia, I taught at the Merchant Marine Academy and at Rutgers. In 1950 I married Renée Riese and the following year, we entered a second house this past fall in Irvine, Calif., and came in Eighth place!”

—Class Correspondent: Nancy Hall Whitehouse (whitebousenancy@gmail.com), 75 State St., Unit 61, Portland, ME 04101.

Correspondent Jean Jordan Sheild reports: Alice Landis Tony was just getting back from picking up some peaches at the grocery store when I called. Living in Hampton Falls, N.H., she is still driving her tractor. Her family gets together for meals and she does the dishes. The best part of working in her flower garden is having a gardener to dig the weeds. Daughter Abigail lives only a block away for her to use. Alix remembers the wonderful Mountain Club hikes at Middlebury and invites classmates to come see her in beautiful New Hampshire. She had a delightful chat with Ann Cole Byington, who’s in Texas. They had a very hot summer in North Richland Hills, but she didn’t go away all summer. Her daughter and husband had gone to Cape Cod with their two dogs in their motor home. Her son recently bought a new home in Austin, which is four hours away. She is well and her husband was hoping to start a men’s choir this past fall. In Centerville, Ohio, Dorothy “Teddy” Hood Bittmann is still living near her daughter, Nancy, who visits her several times a week. Daughter Jean and son Jim also visit from Michigan and Oklahoma. She is now a great-grandmother to two children and will have two new great-grandchildren soon. She is healthy physically, according to Nancy. She feels the best memories Teddy has are of Middlebury. News about Eleanor Reier Brown came from her husband, Fielding, who reported she is cheerful but very forgetful. She is living in one of the White Oak cottages located on the same grounds as the retirement community where he is living, so he is able to see her every day. Their four daughters are scattered around the country but recently one of their daughters and her husband came to visit from Ohio, where they are both professors of psychology at Ohio State University. Betty Brigham Barrett continues to enjoy life at Attria Crossroads in Waterford, Conn. Although she’s in a wheelchair, she is involved in many activities and likes bridge best. Betty’s daughter, Barbara ’58, wrote that her mom recently met her newest great-grandson and experienced great joy holding the baby. Natalie Dane Richdale continues to enjoy her home by the ocean in Kennebunk, Maine.

It’s been in the family for four generations and still has a wood stove. When her children come to visit they collect wood from the beach nearby. Her son and daughter-in-law came from Indiana for a week last summer and another daughter again brought her book club to spend a week, so she was very happy to have a full house. Although Natalie still volunteers three days a week at the Brick Stone Museum when time permits, working on the computer to catalog information, her chief joy in life is the beautiful view of the ocean from her front window. Great news came from Gertrude “Scotty” Lacey Thornton. Her Oriental brush painting students had an exhibit of their works in the art gallery of the atrium of her Fleet Landing retirement community from August 6 to September 3, the first time they’ve had their own exhibit. Her 10 students are all seniors, and they’ve been with her one year learning brush painting. Scotty attended her grandson’s wedding in Kansas City last June and took a cruise from Baltimore to Maine and Nova Scotia in September.

Correspondent John Gale reports: I was sorry to miss reunion but illness prevented my attendance. Thank you to Lois Groben Gilmore and Stu Walker for filling in for me and filing a report about the weekend. Howie Friedman reports he now has both chronic leukemia and Parkinsonism, both treatable, and his previously fractured hip now enables him to walk with ease; in the past he could walk 50 miles a day but now is limited to five. He says Daisy is well and they both continue to appreciate their Vermont neighbors.

Warren Hassmer, in his gardens in Truro, Mass., now emphasizes vegetables in addition to his usual perennials, chiefly growing them from seed but also adding tomatoes on grafted tomato plants for himself and his neighbors to enjoy. Green beans, carrots in tubs, and some strawberries have been added. He continues to host visits from various garden clubs. John “Red” Barmby died on August 23 of Parkinsonism after spending nine weeks in the hospital, according to his wife Ellaveen. Red was one of the five-year Midd/MIT students, who upon graduation was immediately put to work solving various problems in the military. He was involved in studies on breaking the sound barrier in the 1940s, development of the Navy’s missiles in the 1950s, and “going to the moon” projects in the 1960s. Retiring in 1990, he set up a consulting practice, which gave him much-appreciated time to share his wife’s gardening enthusiasm and expertise. Red seemed proudest of his leadership of a group of scientists to assess the cost-effectiveness of weapons systems; he felt that their recommendations to Congress saved hundreds of millions of dollars for the nation. I also regret to report the death of Harold Walch on July 22 in Waldoboro, Maine, where he had lived for several years, next door to daughter Delia Mohlie ’76. Harry majored in history and left early in 1943 to join the Navy, where he helped make history by participating in the battles of Iwo Jima and Okinawa. Postwar, he became a seventh and
The class rambled through art appreciation, philosophy part and, once in a while, some discussion about a book. (It may have been Boynul. If the class dawdled Prof. Owen moved it along with his imagination, never mind facts or syllabus. I also remember what must have been the third worst football team ever, the juggernaut of 1941. This might be explained by the fact that I played on it, and I say third worst because we won one and lost seven while the 40 and 42 teams both lost all eight. Who among you can recall the '44s on the team? How about George Harris, Michael Petropoulos, Art Pepin, John Urban, Bobo Sheehan, Harold Hollister, and Tom Rooney. And me, 142 pounds of running punishment with a rushing average of around minus six yards per carry. I also remember the 'Smoke Shop' in Hepburn Hall. There were two bed/study rooms and in between a sitting room. The bedrooms were occupied by Harry Rossi '43 and Pete Nikitas '43, and the sitting room contained a Coke machine and some cigarettes and candy bars. I remember there was a sort of convenience store located near Main Street, close to Swanson's, where a guy could buy nine bottles of beer for 99 cents. Can you imagine! Nine. And you still got a penny change from a buck. I remember the stillness of a Sunday afternoon on the climb up or down chapel hill, accentuated on a cold winter night by the squinch of snow under your boots. I remember that we wore presentable clothes to class: no backward caps, no tattoos, no lewd T-shirts. I remember we called our teachers by Mr. or Prof or Doctor, never by a first name. My brother Bob and I lived on the first floor of Hepburn Hall. On one side of us were the other brothers in '44, Ferdy and Lew Ensinger, and on the other side lived Joe Kissick, who played trombone in the dance band. (What the heck was the name of that band?) Lynn Sackett '49 lived in Hepburn and George Booth '47, as well. I remember blue books and dances in the gym, where a lot of some colorless liquid got mixed in with Coca-Cola. (Do you suppose Deans Womack and Ross ever figured this out?) I guess this was all part of the Liberal Arts Experience. I remember Hugh Taft as an energetic cheerleader. He was great. There are lots of other memories, too, but these come to mind quickly so I suppose I saw (see) them as significant. It was a fine place to be, all us Depression babies hustling about to set things right (we didn't) and make us a better world (is the jury still out on this?). Hello to all. Keep moving and keep breathing—it's important. See ya at the UVM pep rally. Growl you Panthers, growl." In the next issue, we’ll hear what Kurt has been doing since leaving Middlebury. • Lee Jenkins Johnson sent the sad news that Shirley Earl Banta passed away on August 11. "Shirley and I were roommates one year in the Château and remained friends all the years since then, so it is a great feeling of loss for me and for Sted because we often got together with the Bantas on trips between Toledo and our families on the East Coast. Shirley and Rob had a beautiful place in Cooperstown, N.Y. We also used to meet up with them at a favorite lodge in the Adirondacks—with them and Dot Ayers Ingalls and husband Al." Our class sends condolences to Shirley's family.

—Class Correspondents: Ruth Wheaton Evans (ruwe@verizon.net), 50 Salisbury St., Unit 605, Worcester, MA 01609, Elizabeth Ring Hennef (eliz@earthlink.net), 307 Old Sherman Hill Rd, Woodbury, CT 06798.

44

REUNION CLASS

We received a wonderful, long letter from Kurt "Kogy" Klein, with memories of Middlebury and an update on what he has done since leaving. Since we’d like to use the whole letter, half will appear in this issue and half in the next. We hope it inspires other classmates to send us letters! Kurt writes, "I note in the most recent Class Acts that the Class of 1944 is seventh in the chronological order of vanishing congregations, seventh from disappearing altogether possibly. This is not a happy revelation, but it is an admonishment at least that if I’m ever going to write to you I’d better get on with it while there are still some of us left. I’ve never written to Midd, not once. I read what others write, but I’ve always been content to be the writee and not the writer. Perhaps it is simply my turn. I was in the Class of ’44 but a Midd person for only two years. I graduated from Case Western Reserve Univ with a degree in civil engineering in 1949, transferring from Midd to Middlebury for reasons still unclear since I liked it there and looked forward to being one of its graduates. But, well, young people are allowed to alter their priorities willy-nilly from time to time. And here I am, long retired, still upright, but leaning. Here are some things I remember: I remember Professors Ben Wissler and Harry Goddard Owen ’23. Benny was my physics prof and he was the best teacher I ever had. He wanted his students to learn. I was what may be termed a not-very-intense student, and I always felt I was wasting his time, yet he still cared. H.G. taught a thing called the History of English Literature (or some such) and I’m not sure he cared a whit, but he sure was entertaining. His lectures were fast and difficult. I don’t remember reading anything in his class but we wrote a lot. Every homework assignment was a paper. I wrote 47 of them (I counted). The class rambled through art appreciation, philosophy, literary criticism, a little classical daydreaming on my part and, once in a while, some discussion about a book. (It may have been Boynul. If the class dawdled Prof. Owen moved it along with his imagination, never mind facts or syllabus. I also remember what must have been the third worst football team ever, the juggernaut of 1941. This might be explained by the fact that I played on it, and I say third worst because we won one and lost seven while the 40 and 42 teams both lost all eight. Who among you can recall the ’44s on the team? How about George Harris, Michael Petropoulos, Art Pepin, John Urban, Bobo Sheehan, Harold Hollister, and Tom Rooney. And me, 142 pounds of running punishment with a rushing average of around minus six yards per carry. I also remember the 'Smoke Shop' in Hepburn Hall. There were two bed/study rooms and in between a sitting room. The bedrooms were occupied by Harry Rossi ‘43 and Pete Nikitas '43, and the sitting room contained a Coke machine and some cigarettes and candy bars. I remember there was a sort of convenience store located near Main Street, close to Swanson's, where a guy could buy nine bottles of beer for 99 cents. Can you imagine! Nine. And you still got a penny change from a buck. I remember the stillness of a Sunday afternoon on the climb up or down chapel hill, accentuated on a cold winter night by the squinch of snow under your boots. I remember that we wore presentable clothes to class: no backward caps, no tattoos, no lewd T-shirts. I remember we called our teachers by Mr. or Prof or Doctor, never by a first name. My brother Bob and I lived on the first floor of Hepburn Hall. On one side of us were the other brothers in ’44, Ferdy and Lew Ensinger, and on the other side lived Joe Kissick, who played trombone in the dance band. (What the heck was the name of that band?) Lynn Sackett '49 lived in Hepburn and George Booth '47, as well. I remember blue books and dances in the gym, where a lot of some colorless liquid got mixed in with Coca-Cola. (Do you suppose Deans Womack and Ross ever figured this out?) I guess this was all part of the Liberal Arts Experience. I remember Hugh Taft as an energetic cheerleader. He was great. There are lots of other memories, too, but these come to mind quickly so I suppose I saw (see) them as significant. It was a fine place to be, all us Depression babies hustling about to set things right (we didn't) and make us a better world (is the jury still out on this?). Hello to all. Keep moving and keep breathing—it's important. See ya at the UVM pep rally. Growl you Panthers, growl." In the next issue, we’ll hear what Kurt has been doing since leaving Middlebury. • Lee Jenkins Johnson sent the sad news that Shirley Earl Banta passed away on August 11. "Shirley and I were roommates one year in the Château and remained friends all the years since then, so it is a great feeling of loss for me and for Sted because we often got together with the Bantas on trips between Toledo and our families on the East Coast. Shirley and Rob had a beautiful place in Cooperstown, N.Y. We also used to meet up with them at a favorite lodge in the Adirondacks—with them and Dot Ayers Ingalls and husband Al." Our class sends condolences to Shirley's family.

—Class Correspondents: Ruth Wheaton Evans (ruwe@verizon.net), 50 Salisbury St., Unit 605, Worcester, MA 01609, Elizabeth Ring Hennef (eliz@earthlink.net), 307 Old Sherman Hill Rd, Woodbury, CT 06798.

45

Jessie Woodwell Bush writes, "I turned 90 on June 1 and on that day greeted my first great-granddaughter, Amelia. I also entertained family at a table for eight, when I prepared the main meal, with help from my daughter. Things quickly turned worse and I found myself hospitalized for six days in June and again most of July, during which I had abdominal surgery. I'll spare you the details but, after one month in the hospital and rehab, I joyfully returned home to our apartment on August 9. My husband has been a wonderful support throughout this difficult period. I'm still dealing with the aftermath of the surgery, but receiving good home-health care from nurses and therapists who come weekly. Things could be a lot worse and I'm grateful for every day that my husband and I still have each other, in moderately good health." They were looking forward to an annual trip to Anna Maria Island at the end of October and to celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary. • Bob Brown reports, "I'm just learning to use my new iPad, which is not so easy at age 90. I now understand the phrase 'getting old is not for sissies.'" I saw Don Gilmore recently. He too is feeling his age but his wife Nicki is still going strong as is my wife Carol. I doubt if either of us will make reunion in 2015 but we all think fondly of Middlebury." • Betty Adell McCord says, "Turning 90 happened to me on 7/7. My children really rounded up all my relatives, so it was a combination of family reunion and birthday; the happy note was that they all got along well while getting to know each other. (My three grandchildren were the 'new' part of the family reunion.) • Elaine King Dandd sent sad news. "My husband, Kesari, died on June 2. We had 47 years of love and adventure, and I miss him. It is time to get rid of stuff. I will donate a collection of old Mexican masks to a local museum and sell the antiquites we brought from India. Then I'll leave my half-acre of Texas and move into a local community of the cared-for, where I will probably write a comic novel about us inmates. The good thing about this place is that it has an enormous pool where I can continue to swim laps and it has land where I can cultivate a garden. And yes, I am turning 90. It was inevitable, but I don't believe it." • Jean Dunn Nagle writes, "I'm just checking in to report that I made it to 90 in June. I'm still enjoying the lifestyle here at Linden Ponds in Hingham, Mass., leading the book group and reporting on its activities for our monthly magazine. Our Lifetime Learning classes start up soon and the monthly Pondersers Group keeps us busy trying to solve the world's problems. Best of all are frequent visits from son Jim's family, including my first great-grandchild. Life is good!" • We are sorry to report the deaths of Gordon Matthews on June 29, Kenneth Moore on July 16, and Priscilla "Pete" Hodges Head on September 11. • Yes, I, too, have joined the ranks of the 90-year-olds. Daunting, isn’t it? I’m still swimming 50 laps daily and writing a weekly e-mail to "family and friends," and that’s good news. Let’s keep in touch. "Mew"

60 Middlebury MAGAZINE

—Class Correspondent: Mary Elizabeth Wisotzkey

Unfortunately I have not heard from very many of you recently and if I don’t hear from you, I can’t tell your classmates how you are. • Lois Brigham Selnau wishes to send a special thanks to all the wonderful classmates who faithfully helped with the annual giving goal for 2013. Our participation was 64 percent—49 of our 77 listed classmates helped the Annual Fund exceed their overall goal. She soon will be starting all over again and will be striving for 70 percent for 2014. Surely we can do that!

• Jeannie "Pic" Picard Johnson and husband Art were planning a trip to Killington to use a time-share week. While there, niece Gina and her husband were going to visit for a few days. Then Pic and Art planned to visit their old retirement home for a couple of days. She was hoping to visit the Midd art show. Pic is amused at the way the younger generation regards them. Gina talked with their son Lars and then reported to daughter Laura and then someone called to see if she and Art were behaving! Pic guesses they were worried that she and Art were planning to drive all the way, but they were flying to Burlington and picking up a car to visit with a bunch of old Vermont friends before hitting the center of the state. (I think it’s called role reversal.)

• Ruth Riley Wendell had a nice family weekend in NYC with daughter Phyllis ’58, son-in-law Mike, grandson Will ’11 (on internship in D.C.), and granddaughter Anna ’14 (on internship in NYC). This was to celebrate Will’s 25th birthday. Smiley says this is as exciting as it gets in her life, but it sure was fun. They had lunch with Lucie Suter O’Brien, who is retired from teaching Spanish and French at John Jay College in NYC. I had hoped to hear from Lucie but did not.

• Joan Campbell Shaw spent a week in Maine at the ocean on Drake’s Island with most of her children and grandchildren. Then she had brief, but wonderful visits with "Bac" (Betsy Barclay Wales) and "Flinkie" (Barbara Flink Ewels). Speaking of Flinkie, she had enough excitement for all of us. While she was at her computer, a young bear climbed up on her deck, right where one full bird feeder is located. She rushed to feet to the glass doors and screamed “go away!” clapped, and picked up a deck chair and banged it running towards him. He (or she) looked meek and slowly backed down and Flinkie quickly ran in the house. She took a picture of him eating seeds on the ground to prove he had been there. Well, apparently she didn’t scare him enough because he came back on the deck again. She convinced him to back down a second time. With that she brought in both feeders. She says she has seen bears at her former house up the road and at her daughter Carolynn’s house. Her daughter said if you bring the feeders in at night that is all that is necessary. Not true. That’s why some people don’t feed birds in the summer. I don’t see chasing bears either. • Louise Head Aines attended her grandson’s high school graduation in Colorado. There were many people there, which was very pleasant for her. Louise had to go to Illinois to start the process of cleaning out that house so they can sell the property. (A note from one who has gone through this—it is quite a chore.) She sure misses her Ron, who handled things so easily and well. • As for your correspondent, I spent three months in the summer on Cape Cod in my 100-plus-year-old house filled with stairs everywhere. After being spoiled at my retirement village, I wasn’t sure I would be able to do all the chores of cleaning, cooking, shopping, etc., but I managed very well. It was a great summer with family and friends. Here at the Village Retirement Community, I’ve been enjoying my fitness center, my aqua-class, aerobics, bridge, and many other activities. Write or give me a call (352.727.4555).

—Class Correspondent: Janet Shaw Percival

I had a long telephone conversation with Ruth Barber Toner. She is "amazingly well" and when she went to the doctor’s, he looked at her and said, “You don’t have any wrinkles!” Ruth thinks that is due to a leprechaun in her family tree. She still lives with her son and his family and enjoys life with them and her two grandchildren. She reads a lot but confesses to sometimes getting a bit bored. • Nancy Surtees McKenna still lives in Leesburg, Va., with her son and his family. She’s in good health and her five-year-old hips are just fine, so she gets around quite well, though she no longer drives. She joined a senior center where she started a Spanish conversation class and she’s grateful for the insights about the language and culture gained from Prof. Rose Martin. She has also joined a tai chi class and volunteers at the library. Nancy has made a couple of trips to the Carolinas as well as to Pennsylvania to visit friends and to determine if she could fit into an assisted living lifestyle, should that prove necessary. Her grandson graduated from San Diego State this year and received his ROTC commission. His sister started her freshman year at LSU and another granddaughter will graduate this winter. • Joyce Walsh Heath’s eight children and their families got together to celebrate her 88th birthday at the end of July. There were children, in-laws, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren and they had a grand old time. Joyce took three classes at the Elderly Services College in Middlebury during the summer—one on Italian immigrants in the U.S., a second on a Shostakovich symphony, and the third on arachnophobia/arthropophilia. She has always liked spiders so it was a “real treat to hold a very large, furry spider, which covered my hand, and to have a daddy longlegs crawl up my arms.” Not everyone in the class was as enthusiastic as she. She very much enjoys living at the Lodge at Otter Creek. She teaches bone-builders exercise class every Friday morning and volunteers at the Sheldon Museum on Friday afternoons. She monitors the Lodge library on a daily basis to shelve books and keep it looking neat. In addition she still goes to Brandon Tuesdays and Thursdays to work in the listeners’ office. • Carl Parkinson and wife Helen went to Kanapoli, Maui, to celebrate their 64th anniversary in June. It was their fourth trip to Hawaii but the weather this time was not good. The trade winds brought wind and spurts of rain the entire time. They also found that flying that distance was harder than before. Carl has had a few skin cancer surgeries since returning home, one of which will require skin grafting. He is sorry he missed our 60th reunion but travel has become increasingly difficult for them so they do less and less of it. • Helen Prentice Theimer has published the final book of her Vision trilogy. It is entitled Meera’s Second Life and is published by Amazon, as were the first two books. The book follows the challenges of Meera’s life after a near-death experience and focuses on her search for her true path and her reason for survival. Helen says we will recognize Middlebury in many ways as Meera relives her fictional college experiences: an original Old Stone Row, a library browsing room, a charismatic professor of American lit who just might be Doc Cook, and Robert Frost reading his poems in chapel. Now that the book is finished Helen is able to spend time working in her garden and cleaning her yard. They have had minor health problems but have enjoyed visits from friends and family. They plan to stay where they are as the very thought of moving is so daunting. She says she is getting her excitement vicariously through the imagined events of Meera. • Jinny Stowell James and her husband are still ticking, still busy, still in their house but trying to prepare it for eventual sale when that time becomes necessary. Her husband turned 103 in July and stills functions well. However, they did not follow their usual routine and spend the summer in their Maine cottage. They stayed in Northford, Conn., while their house was worked on. Fortunately for Jinny a friend who owns the cottage next to hers contacted her and asked if she would like to drive up to New Harbor. Jinny accepted with alacrity. Her daughter, Hillary, had opened the cottage 10 days previously when she and her husband arrived from Florida. Jinny spent four days with them and could totally relax before returning to her care-giving tasks. She sees her husband slowly fading and that is hard to watch and is both physically and emotionally exhausting. • Bobbie Bates Lauterwasser enjoyed a reunion with all 14 members of her immediate family, all of whom stayed with her for a week. They were lucky to have good weather so were able to enjoy outdoor games, horse-shoes, tennis, and mountain climbing. Bobbie especially enjoyed their built-in choir at meal times. All four grandchildren are very musical as are their parents. In April they spent a week in St. Petersburg, Fla., with their son and daughter-in-law. They continue to enjoy life at Taylor community in Laconia, N.H. It’s just an hour and a half from their families in the Boston area. Daughter Jill is the organist in Reading, Mass., at the OCC Church so the Christmas Eve service is special for them. • Peggy Armstrong Igleheart traveled to Edinburgh, Scotland, last May for a family celebration. Peggy’s son, Kim, remarried a year ago last August at his vacation home in Lake Tahoe. It was a very private ceremony attended only by his children, the bride’s mother, and Peggy. The bride’s family is very Scottish and very clan minded. They wanted a family celebration in Scotland so they held a reception at the bride’s sister’s home, a beautiful Georgian house in the city bound by historical restrictions even to replacing the old windows with double-insulated glass. Even the interior decoration is subject to control but modern plumbing is permitted. The family then went to Gleneglas for a few days of golf and a formal dinner complete with men in kilts. Luckily Kim is accepted in this milieu because Peg’s father was of Scottish descent. One of the aunts even investigated the clan. Bride and groom are now back home in Seoul, South Korea. Three weeks later Peggy traveled to Midland, Mich., to meet her first great-grandchild. • Valerie Williams Burkig’s major health problem is arthritis, which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. She reads a good deal which limits her motion, makes her fingers and arms weak, and makes her move slowly. • Eleanor Herchtm Regenthal’s husband died at Christmas time 2011 but she feels blessed with her large and close family (13 grand and seven great-grandchildren). Traveling, reading, bridge, and bowling keep her busy. • Char Horse Murphy has a granddaughter working on her master’s and a great-granddaughter who has graduated from high school and is going to the Culinary Institute in Hyde Park, N.Y. Char is still gardening and is treasurer of four organizations. • Pat Malone Bothwell and husband attended a six-day workshop on Romantic musicians in Baltimore last March. Traveling also took them to New Hampshire, Colorado, the Adirondacks, and Hilton Head. • Pat Martin Struglia, in her travels to Egypt, did not ride on a camel but did have a balloon ride over the Valley of the Kings. • Ann Ryder Townsend, who used to live in Hawaii, now lives in Vancouver, Wash., which apparently brings her closer to her family on the West Coast. • Nancy Bushnell Taylor has loved living in her little house in New Hampshire for the past 22 years, especially with her sister, Mary Ellen ’57, next door. Nancy keeps busy with church and community—volunteering and Bible study and visiting family in Massachusetts, Maine, and New Jersey. • Frank and Joan E’Episcopo Muset are celebrating their 65th anniversary this January. They moved into a retirement community several years ago and continue to take courses. • Mary Lee Huff made a move in September 2012 to a continuing care community in Davis, Calif. • Now on to Hawaii where Tom ’49 and Jan Hubbard Metcalf have lived since the early ’50s. They have granddaughters in California, Washington, Wisconsin, and Indiana. Their two grandsons are surfers who win contests regularly. • Tom Johnson has contributed a boxed edition of An Interview with Henry David Thoreau, a filmstrip and record he developed for high school use. It was published by Scott Foresman in 1964 with Hans Conreid impersonating Thoreau. Tom and family are still in Addison, Vt., and he gets over to the College for art shows, music, and women’s hockey games. • Bruce and Nancy Leach Ward live in Williamsburg, Va., in a retirement community, which keeps them busy. Nancy is a Master Naturalist and avid bridge player. • Carolyn Widgemoor Milley still spends summers in Ocean Park, Maine, and then goes “south” for the winter exactly three miles down the same beach. (This reminds me of my parents, who lived in North Hero, Vt., on Lake Champlain in the summers and went “south” to Montpelier when it started to snow) • Correspondent Sandy Rosenbarg reports: With son Nathan leading the way, Rita and I attended the Team Insite reception in Irvine, Calif., on Columbus Day. Insite was the solar house Middlebury entered in the Solar Decathlon this past fall. There was excellent conversation about the College and the project with a mix of students, alums, faculty, and administration—best I’ve ever had. We visited Insite in Irvine City Park. The display was well attended. The Middlebury students did the College proud. • Correspondent Elizabeth Breidenberg Ness reports: Several of you have responded to our pleas for news—many thanks! Patricia Cole Vinther, who lives in Washington State, sang with her church choir in Carnegie Hall and Westminster Abbey. She regretted that she could not join us at reunion, but she was on campus in 1982 with her dad for his 60th reunion. • Else Theisen Waller keeps busy with her computer, puttering in the yard, and reading quite a bit, and she is a lector in her church.
Duncan remarked about how much he enjoyed his years at Middlebury and I can make the same claim. • I had a nice talk with Harold Suresky, who has been spending summers in Goshen, N.Y., with wife Helen and winters in Naples, Fla. While still at Middlebury, he was called into the service and spent three years in the army, serving most of his time in occupied Germany. He was discharged in 1947 as a sergeant and returned to Middlebury to complete his degree. After graduating he decided to remain in his hometown of Goshen and join his father’s automobile dealership. Harold took over the business after his father died in 1960 and was instrumental in the development of the company, which grew from a small dealership to one that now employs 113 people and is the recipient of many awards for their sales, service, and overall customer satisfaction. Harold is optimistic that with their 100th anniversary coming up in 2016 there will be a fourth generation joining the legacy that he, his father, and now a son have established in that community. An interesting article appeared last May in the Goshen newspaper, telling how Harold had been named Grand Marshal of the Goshen 2013 Memorial Day Parade because of his many contributions to the community. Harold and Helen were married in 1952 and raised three children—Suzanne, Peter, and Joseph. Their children have given them seven great-grandchildren. Harold told me that they were planning to retire in Naples and live in an independent living residence. He says their health is good and he keeps up with Middlebury news.

—Class Correspondents: Dixon Hemphill (dixonH1925@cox.net), 10910 Olm Dr, Fairfax Station, VA 22030; Rachel Adkins Platt (rplatt27@gmail.com), 34 Toby Brook, Pittsford, NY 14534.

Happy New Year to you all. Since Phyllis Cole Denning (with help from Bill) wrote about us for five years, now it’s time to focus on her. Phyllis was featured in the Shelburne News recently in the “People of Shelburne” article. Phyllis and Bill moved to Shelburne, Vt., in 1953 and have been very active in town activities. Bill is a member of Rotary, chaired the bicentennial celebration, was volunteer fireman, etc. Phyllis canvassed for every health drive, helped integrate the private kindergarten to the public school system, and started the hot lunch program, among other activities. In 1967 Phyllis started the Shelburne News. “I started it because nobody knew what was going on in town.” She also became a teacher’s aide in three different kindergarten classes, and owned and managed a bookstore. She did all this while raising four wonderful children. “We didn’t have daycare, we had each other.” She now hosts twice a month at the Charlotte Senior Center and has taught vignette writing classes, and she loves to sit down to write brief, evocative stories. Her life philosophy is “Life is too short to be bound by shoulds. There are no have-tos. I tell myself that today I am going to.” Bill was also a town selectman for 24 years until he chose not to run again, was a founding member of the Shelburne Rotary Club, and persuaded the then selectmen to honor Shelburne’s bicentennial and was chairman of the blockbuster weekend, which included the presence of England’s Earl of Shelburne. Phyllis and Bill enjoy vacationing on Cape Cod as well as at their camp on Lake Champlain. They enjoy the peacefulness watching the sailboats come and go. They also attend Alumni College and strongly recommend it. This year they and Will Jackson represented the Class of 1951. Phyllis took the course on Moby Dick (was the instructor as passionate as Prof. Cook?) and Bill studied Lake Champlain on the new Middlebury research vessel. • Barbara Pike Prinn enjoyed a wonderful family reunion in July. The “star” was her six-month-old grandson. Other grandchildren included Heather (40) and three great-grandchildren. For Barb the most wonderful thing about Middlebury is that she met and married husband Ron '52 there. Other great things are the education and the physical beauty. She continues to enjoy life at Heritage Heights Retirement Community in New Hampshire, where there are lots of activities, good friends, and a fine local church. • Alec Marshall writes, "Anne and I continue to be living the dream." They met 65 years ago at Middlebury and besides each other they have the love and support of children and grandchildren. They recently had a reunion of over 50 family and extended family. They still see and enjoy former students, who are now in their 70s. While golfing the son of the late Paul Smith yelled hello to Alec from across the golf course. Alec and Anne are hoping to visit Ireland with their children and spouses. They ask if anyone has suggestions for any must-see attractions. • Scott Buzby wrote that they are planning to sell their home in Nova Scotia and move to Vermont! Their primary residence is in Florida, however. • Betty Woods Gale and Ken '50 and Carolyn Sackett Coleburn, along with Jim and Barb Lukens Calkins, met for their annual summer luncheon in Montpelier, Vt. They always enjoy this chance to get together and get caught up, but they do miss the late Dave '40 and Mary Krum Dale. Betty did get a chance to get to Middlebury to see the Edward Hopper exhibit of his Vermont watercolor paintings. • From far western Canada word came from Joan Macklaier Birkett. She had googled Gretchen Storer Evans and they recalled fond memories of skiing together along with the late Margy Packard Ramsey. Joan keeps busy as the secretary on the council board of the 18-unit complex where she lives. She continues to learn new skills. That's what keeps you young, Joan. • From across the pond in England, Gretchen Reneg Mason writes that she enjoys a book club, film club, volunteering, and a continued interest in an unusual forgotten 19th-century garden, which was rediscovered in 1980. She had a visit from a New York State nephew and took him to some special places like Sutton Hoo (where an intact Saxon ship burial was found), Canterbury Cathedral, and the lost grave of Pocahontas. • Things are going well for Bill Stewart and wife Peggy: Their grandchildren are fine young men. One is at Point Loma Nazarene Univ. in San Diego, and the other is entering the Univ of California, Davis, which is not far from San Rafael, where Bill and his wife live. Bill expressed his sadness at the news of the death of Neil Myers. He recalled that he and Neil spent the summer of 1938 at a camp on Gardiner Lake in Connecticut. They were Theta Chi brothers at Midd and roommates with Jeff Francisco during their senior year. We join Bill in expressing our sadness and our condolences to Neil's family and friends. • We are also sad to report the death of Myron Hunt. Bob Bigelow was a longtime friend of Myron's. They met in their early days at Middlebury, playing football. They both married while in college and have been close friends over the years. Our condolences to the family and friends of Myron. • We also learned of the death of Persis Luke Loveys '53, wife of Ralph Loveys. Our sympathy to Ralph and the family and friends of Persis. • I (Lee) hope you all enjoy reading all of the interesting articles in the Middlebury Magazine. We are lucky to have such a fine magazine to keep us in touch with our alma mater. • We wish you good health, happiness, and peace—and don't forget to correspond!

—Class Correspondents: Lee Webster McArthur (rlmca@verizon.net), 72 Willow St., Cranford, NJ 07016; Beth Huey Newman (bethhuenewman@gmail.com), 300 Woodhaven Dr., Apt. 2509, Hilton Head, SC 29928.

52 Correspondent Chuck Ratté reports: As I sit here at my computer in early September writing a report for the coming winter issue, wildfires are raging in several Western states, where several classmates nos reside. It seemed to me there may be concern for the welfare of our former brethren. So I sent queries to classmates in Idaho and California wondering if they have, or anyone they know has, been affected by the disaster. A letter came from Jim Cooley, who lives in Troy, Idaho, a considerable distance from the fires in Sun Valley, which said fires in Idaho are always a possibility. He has made extensive and hopefully preventative measures just in case his home becomes endangered by fire. These include metal roofing and cement boarding on his home as well as a broad open space around the house and plenty of fire insurance. He added an additional update: he got his PhD in 1987 from the Univ of Minnesota followed by teaching at the Univ of Idaho until 1992. He has kept in touch with Don Beck and Charlie Archibald. A bonus photo of Jim and wife Zoe was included on the letterhead—you're both looking good! • A thoughtful e-mail came from Charlie Archibald thanking me (as the representative for '52) for concern for the residents of California who have lost their homes or even their lives as a result of the fires. His location, luckily, has been spared from the fires and he has not even experienced an earthquake in the eight years he has lived in California. He considers his location as a small part of heaven with no winter and no hot summers. At 88 he has settled in for the duration. • John and Barbara “Bobbie” Becker Taylor and their children live within 60 miles of the Pacific Coast in cities far from the raging fires. However they have friends who received evacuation orders. They were also concerned about Berkeley's water supply as 85 percent of it comes from a reservoir near one of the fires and they were afraid run-off from fall and winter rains might contaminate it. • Correspondent Barbara Cummiskey Villet reports: At this stage we seem to mix the good with the not-so-good news as this column will reflect. On the good side, Sally Baldwin Utiger and Lee McGowan Allison took Northeast Rail to Alexandria, Va., for a mini-reunion with their longstanding pals, Jean Vaughan Varney and Louise Erb Mayr. Jean reports that once the New England contingent arrived, they took off sightseeing in the District and Old Town Alexandria. Then they had a posh lunch at the Trump National Country Club in Potomac Falls, in Loudoun County, where Louise joined them. Three happy days together confirmed the old connections from Middlebury. • Jean also reported that earlier on, Barbara Bieber Zeiller had come to Washington and they had gone together to the old Merriweather Post estate at Hillwood. Barbara stayed for a needlework exhibition, but Jean, always busy, demurred. Jean will have completed a visit Paris as you read this, the fifth or sixth trip to Europe with the same group but her first to Paris. • Joyce Rohr was back in Colorado for a grandson's graduation but has been largely absorbed with moving herself and husband Offert from their home of several decades into a new condo overlooking Copenhagen. It was one of those moves that required facing collections going back half a century—and thinning same. They did it. Congratulations! • Shirley Herrman Andrews was in touch with an update on her busy life. "In 2009 we sold our big Concord, Mass., house of 45 years and bought a condo in Tucson, Ariz., and a condo in Concord, in which an unfinished basement was filled with stuff from the big house until given away or sold. Then in 2012 we bought a smaller condo, also in Concord, where we're very happy. We spend the winters in Tucson with plenty of room for visitors. I have one flute student and am involved in radio programs and fan mail re my books—Atlantis: Insights From a Lost Civilization and Lemuria and Atlantis: Traveling the Past to Survive the Future. In April I'll be the keynote speaker at a conference at the Association for Research and Enlightenment in Virginia Beach. Bill and I attended Alumni College in August, where we really had a wonderful time—excellent food, lots of interesting people, terrific classes, and good weather for hiking. But sadly, no one else from '52. • And now to the not-so-good news. I finally reconnected with Bunny Wells Frisbie. The disconnect was because she and husband Dean had moved from their home in San Francisco to their second home near their winery in Spring Valley. I got Dean on the phone first and he reported that Bunny has developed memory problems. But when he put her on the phone, she immediately remembered me and Middlebury—good, old memories stay strong with us it seems. She complained of a bad hip, which Dean confirmed, and problems keeping track of things, but it was nice to think she was pleased to recall those earlier happy days at college. When I sent her an email over the phone it was returned. • Correspondent Mary Halsted Franceoor reports: Marly Beck Burgess and longtime companion Al Brown took a Lindblad National Geographic cruise around the Baltic Sea. They stopped in Holland, Germany, Poland, Lithuania, Sweden, and Denmark. A high point of the trip was when Lech Walesa, former president of Poland and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, came to their ship with the USSR and the importance of the European winner of the Nobel Peace Prize. She didn’t hunt anymore, but when her husband was alive, they spent a lot of time hunting in Vermont. They hunted with bows and arrows and one on trip, there were 13 men and she was the only woman and only one to get a deer. She did it with one perfect shot! She doesn’t hunt anymore, but her dog is an English pointer.

Class Correspondent: Mary Halsted Francoeur (guilfoverfly@globalnet.), 456 Garvey Ave., Lake Bluff, II. 60044. Chuck Ratté (cr7658@gmail.com), PO Box 263, Saxtons River, VT 05154, Barbara Cummiskey Villet (villetbe1@gmail.com), 208 Eagleville Rd., Shushan, NY 12873.

I returned from our 60th reunion to learn that I was the new class correspondent. Are you kidding? Both Link Furber and Roger May are trained and experienced journalists! From Columbia, no less. And Janet Bradley Harris will be a hard act to follow. On short notice I will give it a shot, but I don’t expect it to be easy. The 60th reunion had a huge turnout but the 60th, not so much. Lots of people we hoped to see were not there, so in the year to come I will try to track some of you down and share what information I get as best I can. Some of you may recall that 40 or 50 years ago we had a newsletter. The Alumni Office sent out cards to you, which if filled out, came to me as secretary with the news of those days—new jobs, new children, new addresses, and all that. I typed up a summary that the College mimeographed and mailed out. Yes, it was that long ago. While technology has advanced marvelously, our numbers have dwindled and our news is more sedate, sometimes sad. Still, I hope people will check in with whatever is going on: Travels, not surprisingly, have included trips to the London Olympics and to the Final Four in New Orleans to watch UConn’s basketball warriors win all the gold. In winter Ginny uses up her spare time taking courses at the university, volunteering as an ambulance driver, sort of, and, enjoying, she says, “a very good life.” On a more somber note, I received notice of the passing of Dave Parker, no relation, but a friend in our Starr Hall freshman gang. In his life summary for the 50th reunion, Dave wrote of his three dreams: to live in his grandparents’ house in Vermont, to travel everywhere, and to be a pilot. After marrying his sweetheart Carol in their sophomore year and graduating from Middlebury, he succeeded famously in fulfilling all three. Well done, Dave. Our condolences and best wishes to the family. That’s it for now. The Bob Parkers are still lucky to be surviving retirement in Ohio, with occasional junkets to New England or Florida. All is well, for now. Let me hear from you so I can share what you are up to with those that are still with us. We must all ponder the question put by Mr. Frost’s ovenbird: “The question that he frames in all words/Is what to make of a diminished thing.”

Class Correspondent: Robert Parker (rwpark@earthlink.net), 1005 Fruitland Rd., Springfield, OH 45501.

REUNION CLASS Bill Skiff agrees that it’s sad to see so many of our classmates passing on. “It seems to be happening all around us. I remember sitting in the balcony of the chapel during our senior year and looking down on the 60th reunion class and thinking, ‘Man do those people look old.’ Next year I am going to look up at the balcony and say, ‘Congratulations, you have your whole life ahead of you and if you can sit down here where I am at your 60th reunion, you can consider yourself fortunate.’ So far I have been lucky health-wise. I still ski, work at Bolton Valley on weekends, play tennis a couple times a week, ride my bike, and kayak the beautiful lakes of Vermont. Two years ago the editor of our local paper asked me if I would write a column about growing up in Vermont. I’ve been having fun with it and I now appear in four local papers. My last column was called, ‘I Rode the Tie.’ It was about our fraternity party on the Tie in 1954. It was a dinner and dance moonlight cruise. What fun. I recently had nice conversations with Arne Heggen, Bruce Byers ’55, and Fred Wyckoff. It was nice to hear their voices again.

The other day I ran into a man who said he was 2,000 years old and was one of the first men to graduate from Middlebury College. If our class would like, I could try to find him again and see if he would agree to address our class at our 60th reunion dinner. Let me know, as he may be hard to find again. Take care and see you in 2014.”

Shep Hunterly writes, “I’ve been a Greensboro, North Carolinian since 1974. I don’t do much due to age and health issues but several years ago I wrote a book, There Was a Great Golfer From... which is a book of 900 limericks about golfers from 18 communities within each state and Middlebury is included. I have sold several hundreds at arts and crafts shows where my creative wife, Betty, sells her painted wine glasses and sewing creations.” Shep sent me (Nancy) a copy of his very amusing book, which I promised to bring to reunion. Speaking of our 60th reunion, please save the dates June 6-8 for a trip back to your past and join your classmates on our gorgeous campus to celebrate friendship, longevity, learning, and life in general! If you would like to be part of this reunion, and I do hope many of you will be, contact Jan McCray in the Alumni Office to express your willingness to help (incray@middlebury.edu or 802.443.5443). Please join us for a beautiful June weekend and contribute generously to our class gift!

Class Correspondent: Nancy Whittemore Nickerson (forger@prodigy.net), 4 Osprey Ln., Mystic, CT 06355.

55 Correspondent Sally Dickerman Brew reports: We sometimes hear about our classmates’ life work after they have died. Bruce Byers, who lives near Middlebury, sent a note about Jerry Trudeau, who died in September. He said that Jerry’s son, Mark, helped Bruce and the local Habitat for Humanity on a project. A few weeks later, Bruce and Sue (Heyer) were at an alumni lunch and Jerry sat down next to them and they really got caught up. Jerry obviously was then suffering from the cancer he died from shortly thereafter but he did not let on at all. Jerry gave the College the Maple Manor Motel property—a valuable property of 50 acres. Jerry, as written in his obituary, specialized in civil litigation, real estate, and business law. He also spent hundreds of hours over the course of his law career on an unpaid/pro bono basis. He was an independent and nonpolitical advocate (ombudsman) for local and state civic betterment. He had a profound interest in the unification of Vermont courts and in the reform of the Vermont judicial system. Unfortunately most of us were unaware of the contributions Jerry was making in his lifetime in Middlebury and Vermont. • Another one of our classmates, Malcolm Davidson, died in September. John von Hartz wrote the following about Malcolm: "One of my roommates in college, Malcolm was a sharp, funny buddy who didn't talk a lot (unlike me), but when he spoke he was usually on target. His dry humor was evident in offbeat ways. A gifted athlete, he regularly beat me in tennis. Once when I was leading and serving for the set he called across the net to me, 'You are all wrapped up in your own inadequacies.' Of course I double faulted and eventually lost the set. A voracious reader, not always of college textbooks, he often surprised with his breadth of knowledge. He was a steady friend and great roommate. A solid citizen in every way." • Alumni College once again brought together 16 of our classmates. Linda and Frank Punderson started the weekend with a lively dinner for our classmates and their spouses the night before at their lovely home in Cornwall. John Field wrote the following about his experience at Alumni College. "As usual Alumni College was a wonderful opportunity to gain intellectual stimulation, provided by several of Midd's outstanding professors, as well as enjoy camaraderie, great accommodations, and wonderful cuisine. In addition to the structured schedule, classmates amused themselves with extracurricular activities. During periods between classes, Judy Zecher Colton, Junie Stringer DeCoster, Nancy Walker Faulkner, Scotty MacGregor Gillette, Kathy Hughes von Hartz, and Mary Lou King Wollmar could be found on the porch of Maple Cottage, engaged in a very serious bridge game. In an entirely different venue, John von Hartz provided his annual tennis lesson to Bruce Byers during a hotly contested doubles match, along with George Limbach, Scotty Gillette, Charlie Grigg, a friend, and Mavis Field, wife of John. On several occasions, John von Hartz quipped that the placement of the tennis net, which impeded his ferocious forehand shot, was either not at the proper height or misplaced on the court. John also remarked, after several missed overhead shots, that several years ago, when he was three inches taller, he would have made a perfect shot. Such is the plight of 80-year-olds participating in athletic events. • David Bridges and wife Nancy have been regulars at Alumni College. They live now on a small lake just west of Green Mountain College. David has been retired for a number of years from the Hackley School in Tarrytown, N.Y., where he started out as a theater instructor and became assistant headmaster. During the 39 years that he was there, he saw great growth in numbers and prestige in the school. After Alumni College I (Sally), with husband Dave, had the opportunity to visit Judd Colton on her wonderful farm in Dorset, Vt. While at Middlebury, the farm was her home. Her father bought the farm and moved his family from New York when Judd was a teenager. She now lives on the farm in summer in the original farmhouse. For Judd's 80th birthday, her five children planned a surprise birthday on the farm, complete with a band, banners, games, and dancing. With her entire family there and many friends, Judd celebrated her 80th birthday is style. • Once again, George Limbach is organizing a Middlebury '55 February ski week in Vail. All classmates are invited whether you ski or not. • Contact George if you wish to join this spirited group. • Jerry and Gretchen Rath Doolittle are still living in West Cornwall, Conn. Their granddaughter Bethany is a starting player for the Univ. of Iowa basketball team. Jerry is "reviving" his six mysteries about Tom Bethany, "one time political operative, Air America pilot, and college wrestler who lives in Cambridge." You can Google "Jerome Doolittle Bad Attitudes" and see Jerry's views on the passing scene and more about his other books.

56

We sent out a note looking for news and, quick as a wink, it came right in. Jack McDermott wanted his classmates to know that he'll be joining the ranks of the retired—"but not quite yet—not till May 2016. An auspicious 50 years after graduating from Middlebury; 50 years after getting his law degree; and the year his youngest daughter graduates from that other New England liberal arts college—the one south on Route 7 in Massachusetts. He's on a three-year "glide path" to retirement—fewer classes (which is nice) and less pay (which isn't). But he still gets to travel for Moot competitions—at the Law School expense. He's been to Bali and Singapore and will be going to Sapporo, Japan. • Ron Potier writes, "Had a wonderful weekend at Alumni College, where I studied geography, of all things. I recommend it highly. Hope to repeat the experience next year." • Fred Parsons writes, "We are residents of Grantham, N.H., on Stocker Pond except in January through April when we are in Sedona, Ariz. I did industrial/resale instructional design all my working career and I also did ski patrol work for 30 years. I was at the Army Pictorial Center in Long Island City for my active duty two years. I got an MBA from Northeastern. Wife Nan enjoys both oil painting and watercolors. Our oldest child is a boy working in the Internet/dot.com business. At age 43 my oldest daughter just graduated in July from Johns Hopkins School of Nursing and was with a medical group in Africa for a month. Our youngest daughter designs uniform helps the Army and has given us two grandchildren, boys ages 9 and 5, who keep us on our toes. If anyone is visiting Sedona from January—April and needs some info about the area, you can contact us via my website (www.parsonsprints.com)." • Sad news came from Mary Anne Thorne Lewis: "Alan and I moved to California in June 2012 to be at a lower elevation and to be closer to my daughter Tracy. I'm so sad to say that Alan died on January 1, 2013. We had 19 wonderful years together. Here is my new address: 5540 W. 5th St. Oxnard, CA 93035." • Ron Lawson writes, "I attended a reunion in D.C. with Army buddies from that secret world of Army Intelligence. I was invited to speak at the luncheon at Fort Myer, Va., and was honored to present a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns on behalf of our fallen comrades. A couple hundred people were present for the reunion. Most are World War II vets in their 80s and 90s. I'm slowly adjusting to living back in my hometown (Montpellier) after some 50 years away. I don't seem to recognize those old codgers on the block, but they inform me that we were all in high school together. (I need new glasses.)" • You have to admit that Alma Goethe Peacock gets around: "I had a busy summer with lots of long weekend getaways within the U.S., and I also went to France. My daughter, son-in-law, and I toured the D-Day invasion sites, battlefields, and cemeteries, staying in Bayeux where we saw the tapestries. We moved on to Amiens and branched out to WWI sites. Renting a car allowed us to go at our own pace and enjoy the French countryside. Next up is a visit to an old friend in the UK this spring." • Bob Morris writes, "Early on in elementary school in New Rochelle, N.Y., I was in a play and had the role of a king. I vividly remember delivering a line and saw the entire audience (kids and parents) actually rock backward laughing. I was hooked! While growing up (which is still in progress), I had a fascination about comedy. I saw Jerry Lewis live when I was 15 and watched him on the Colgate Comedy Hour. Up until July of this year number one on my bucket list was 'Do standup comedy in front of a live audience.' I did that at the Gotham Comedy Club in NYC and was pleased with the results (27 laughs in six minutes of performing). You can see it on youtube.com if you type in my name and Gotham Comedy Club. Now number one on my bucket list is 'Monetize whatever comedic talent I have as a writer or performer.' Stay tuned." • From Peg Strauss Patierno came, "Charlotte Duryea McDermott wanted his classmates to see page 77. • It's wonderful to hear what's going on in our classmates' lives, so when your turn comes, we hope you'll send in your news. Thanks and best regards to all, Judy and Dick."
We heard from Peter "Dip" Decker: "For the past three summers Barbara and Hugh Marlow have come to our Colorado ranch to help with minimal chores. Hugh tired of fixing fences, so this year he sent a replacement, Sabra Harwood Glastonbury, CT 06033."

Maj'iiard and Lee Hall Albern (plus husbands), when they visited us here in Hopkinton. And last July, Daughter Amy created a nice memorial: www.forevermissed.com/Suzanne-elizabeth-babbidge#about.

We're sorry to report that Sue Babbidge died on July 25. Her well-remembered great uncle was the late Senator Richard Allen Babbidge, dean of the state Senate. He represented the 10th District and was a member of the American Legions, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. He served in the United States Air Force during the Korean War.

The gathering: Girmy Baker Hansen (Sylvia's roommate for three years) was there—she and her husband were en route to Maine. The year-round New Hampshire residents included Mary Ellen Bushnell, Glen Graper and wife Mary Lou, Murray and Julie French Campbell, and Peter and Gail Beckett. The summer resident group included Wayne and Pam Clark Reilly, and Betsy Mathewson Bailey and husband Broadus, and one "out-of-stater" classmate came: Adrienne Littlewood DeLaney with husband Bob '51. • We're sorry to report that John Middleton died on June 16. Having both tutored English in Poland, John and wife Ginny (Havighurst) '58 worked locally, tutoring with the Literary Volunteers. Ironically, perhaps, they had settled in place of my (Barclay) habitat for the most privileged teenagers in the world (Taft School). My personal memories of John were renewed annually when John's phalanx of bagnippers marched at every Taft graduation. • In Australia Katherine and Bo Wakefield have conspired on a masterly memoir about their quest to know life Down Under. The evening under the tent with many more classmates coming around was tender, too." • Eleven "old" Zeta Psi fraternity members and their guests congregated for good times, reminiscences, and Italian food in Northampton, Mass., during the week after our reunion in June. Our class had the greatest representation with Carolyn Hanson Faulhaber, Carol Hardy Hawthorne, Dick Mrstik, Chan Nims, and Sonny Wilder all present. From the class just ahead of us in '57 came John Faulhaber, Allen Hawthorne, Merrill Mack, and Don Young; and joining in from the class behind ours in '59 were Frank Simon, Sherwood Smith, Avery Tillinghast, and Bill Wemmerus.

Jock Glidden e-mails, "I'm 14 years retired. I treat it as an art form. My first few years were busy; now it's decorating one of our rooms a year. My son G.H. Peter Bostwick III '78 had daughter Kathryn graduate from Middlebury in '12. She was captain of the squash team." • Still savoring reunion weekend, Rachel Cutter Bender writes, "Our 55th was wonderful. Highlights were attending choir rehearsals in the chapel with Emory Fanning directing, a morning walk with Ro (Mary Roemmele Crowley), being with my Château buddies—Bonne (Alice "Bonne" Mairs), Lucy (Lucile Carpenter Freeman), and Ginny (Virginia Havighurst Middleton)—together INSIDE Hepburn (nice!), brunch at Dottie's (Dorothy Bigelow Neuberger), and the Lewiss (John and Susan Lockwood Lewis) community with maple syrup favors I trucked home to Colorado. The evening under the tent with many more classmates coming around was tender, too." • Eleven "old" Zeta Psi fraternity members and their guests congregated for good times, reminiscences, and Italian food in Northampton, Mass., during the week after our reunion in June. Our class had the greatest representation with Carolyn Hanson Faulhaber, Carol Hardy Hawthorne, Dick Mrstik, Chan Nims, and Sonny Wilder all present. From the class just ahead of us in '57 came John Faulhaber, Allen Hawthorne, Merrill Mack, and Don Young; and joining in from the class behind ours in '59 were Frank Simon, Sherwood Smith, Avery Tillinghast, and Bill Wemmerus.

Jock Glidden e-mails, "I'm 14 years retired. I treat it as an art form. My first few years were busy; now it's decorating one of our rooms a year. My son G.H. Peter Bostwick III '78 had daughter Kathryn graduate from Middlebury in '12. She was captain of the squash team." • Still savoring reunion weekend, Rachel Cutter Bender writes, "Our 55th was wonderful. Highlights were attending choir rehearsals in the chapel with Emory Fanning directing, a morning walk with Ro (Mary Roemmele Crowley), being with my Château buddies—Bonne (Alice "Bonne" Mairs), Lucy (Lucile Carpenter Freeman), and Ginny (Virginia Havighurst Middleton)—together INSIDE Hepburn (nice!), brunch at Dottie's (Dorothy Bigelow Neuberger), and the Lewiss (John and Susan Lockwood Lewis) community with maple syrup favors I trucked home to Colorado. The evening under the tent with many more classmates coming around was tender, too." • Eleven "old" Zeta Psi fraternity members and their guests congregated for good times, reminiscences, and Italian food in Northampton, Mass., during the week after our reunion in June. Our class had the greatest representation with Carolyn Hanson Faulhaber, Carol Hardy Hawthorne, Dick Mrstik, Chan Nims, and Sonny Wilder all present. From the class just ahead of us in '57 came John Faulhaber, Allen Hawthorne, Merrill Mack, and Don Young; and joining in from the class behind ours in '59 were Frank Simon, Sherwood Smith, Avery Tillinghast, and Bill Wemmerus. • Jock Glidden e-mails, "I'm 14 years retired. I treat it as an art form. My first few years were busy; now it's decorating one of our rooms a year. My son G.H. Peter Bostwick III '78 had daughter Kathryn graduate from Middlebury in '12. She was captain of the squash team." • Still savoring reunion weekend, Rachel Cutter Bender writes, "Our 55th was wonderful. Highlights were attending choir rehearsals in the chapel with Emory Fanning directing, a morning walk with Ro (Mary Roemmele Crowley), being with my Château buddies—Bonne (Alice "Bonne" Mairs), Lucy (Lucile Carpenter Freeman), and Ginny (Virginia Havighurst Middleton)—together INSIDE Hepburn (nice!), brunch at Dottie's (Dorothy Bigelow Neuberger), and the Lewiss (John and Susan Lockwood Lewis) community with maple syrup favors I trucked home to Colorado. The evening under the tent with many more classmates coming around was tender, too." • Eleven "old" Zeta Psi fraternity members and their guests congregated for good times, reminiscences, and Italian food in Northampton, Mass., during the week after our reunion in June. Our class had the greatest representation with Carolyn Hanson Faulhaber, Carol Hardy Hawthorne, Dick Mrstik, Chan Nims, and Sonny Wilder all present. From the class just ahead of us in '57 came John Faulhaber, Allen Hawthorne, Merrill Mack, and Don Young; and joining in from the class behind ours in '59 were Frank Simon, Sherwood Smith, Avery Tillinghast, and Bill Wemmerus. • Jock Glidden e-mails, "I'm 14 years retired. I treat it as an art form. My first few years were busy; now it's decorating one of our rooms a year. My son G.H. Peter Bostwick III '78 had daughter Kathryn graduate from Middlebury in '12. She was captain of the squash team." • Still savoring reunion weekend, Rachel Cutter Bender writes, "Our 55th was wonderful. Highlights were attending choir rehearsals in the chapel with Emory Fanning directing, a morning walk with Ro (Mary Roemmele Crowley), being with my Château buddies—Bonne (Alice "Bonne" Mairs), Lucy (Lucile Carpenter Freeman), and Ginny (Virginia Havighurst Middleton)—together INSIDE Hepburn (nice!), brunch at Dottie's (Dorothy Bigelow Neuberger), and the Lewiss (John and Susan Lockwood Lewis) community with maple syrup favors I trucked home to Colorado. The evening under the tent with many more classmates coming around was tender, too." • Eleven "old" Zeta Psi fraternity members and their guests congregated for good times, reminiscences, and Italian food in Northampton, Mass., during the week after our reunion in June. Our class had the greatest representation with Carolyn Hanson Faulhaber, Carol Hardy Hawthorne, Dick Mrstik, Chan Nims, and Sonny Wilder all present. From the class just ahead of us in '57 came John Faulhaber, Allen Hawthorne, Merrill Mack, and Don Young; and joining in from the class behind ours in '59 were Frank Simon, Sherwood Smith, Avery Tillinghast, and Bill Wemmerus.
Bonnie Mairs spent last summer at her new cabin in northern Minnesota. At a time when many classmates are downsizing, she is reversing the trend, now owning 24 acres (9 accessible only by boat) on a beautiful small lake with only two neighbors. She saw a wolf on her road this summer. Lucy Freeman and her two golden retrievers spent a week with her, canoeing (dogs too) and hiking and just sitting and watching the cloud reflections in the lake. It's a simple life—hand pump at the kitchen sink, propane lights, and an outhouse.

If your plans take you to the area next summer and if you can put up with the amenities, she says come and visit! • William Moyer, after getting his PhD in physics from RPI and then joining the faculty there, later went on to enjoy a 30-plus-year career as a research scientist with the New York State Health Dept. Bill, now retired, says that it didn't take him too long to adjust to life as a retiree. In fact, he found himself returning to his high school hobby as a ham radio operator and has since connected with other operators in a hundred countries. He still uses W2KKJ, the call he received from the FCC back on July 24, 1951. Bill and wife Judith (Plumb) '61 now enjoy life in Poestenkill, N.Y., outside of Albany. • From Southport, N.C., Yvonne “Spenny” Cosby Moody sent this e-mail: “My husband, Pete, who spent many weekends at Midd, died last year, eight years after suffering bilateral strokes. My family and I are glad he's not miserable anymore. My three children and four grandchildren are doing well; the eldest granddaughter has started college. I was arrested last July as part of North Carolina’s Moral Monday protest program in which thousands of people showed up at our capital, over a period of weeks, to express their displeasure with the actions of our legislature. I bet you never missed a glorious season and a trip to visit. It was a great experience; it has allowed for frequent visits with Nancy Le Floc'h and her family, which have enriched my life.” • Eric Lorenzen reported on his Andean hike via the practically nonexistent Ancascocha Trail over two 15,000-foot passes in three days; thence to Machu Picchu. In Santiago he visited his youngest son, Jonathan, who works in a bar/nightclub, the hottest time, first singly, then with our kids, and now with grandchildren. That leads us to our 55th reunion, which your class correspondent, Lucy and Andy, are co-chairing. While we are still alert, alive, and learning, put June 6–8 on your calendars now! Much more info will be coming. We would like all of you to volunteer in making this reunion, the last before we turn 80 years old, a very memorable experience. • Reunion Class: Mary Roemmele Crowley (artandmarycrowley@comcast.net), 7 Hill Pond Rd., Rutland, VT 05701; Sonny Wilder (wilder$yi@gmail.com), 211 Hillcrest Rd., Needham, MA 02492.
neuter/release program. He keeps in touch with his Zeta Psi brothers, Mike Robinson and Cal Schmeichel, who has a B&B in upstate New York. • Barbara and Bernie Brodsky have moved to Las Cruces, N.M.

His book, Death In Diyarbakir, was named as a finalist in the action/adventure category at the 2013 Indie Book Awards Contest. • Jim Wright's daughter, Leslie '84, lives in East Middlebury; a few miles from where she was born while Jim was a grad student at Bread Loaf. Ten years ago Leslie started a foundation called STRIDE for female athletes. One project was to equip and train Middlebury junior high students who cannot

GRADUATE SCHOOLS

ARABIC SCHOOL

David Cross ('99, '04, '06) was awarded a Doctor of Philosophy in comparative literature by the Univ. of South Carolina in August. He is an assistant professor at Charleston Southern Univ., where he teaches Spanish and Arabic.

BREAD LOAF SCHOOL OF ENGLISH

In the fall Kay Bennett (MA '66) gave a presentation about Mary Jemison, the "White Woman of the Genesee," for the Almond (N.Y.) Historical Society, portraying Mary dramatically as part of the program. • Joe Rigali (MA '89), a GW & Wade counselor, was recognized recently as the 2014 Five Star Wealth Manager by Boston Magazine. He has been a principal at GW & Wade since 1988. He lives in Concord, Mass., with wife Tracy Winn ('86-'88). • Stephanie Shute Kelsch (MA '82) is the new pastor at Second Parish Church in Hingham, Mass. Her great-great-great-great-grandfather was the church's first minister. • Stephen Duffy (MA '89) was recently named the head school at Falmouth (Mass.) Academy, starting July 1. Currently he is the upper school principal at Rutgers Preparatory School in Somerset, N.J. • Mark Wright (MA '89) presented "The History of Jazz" for the Harrington Park Historical Society. A musical program, he played piano and related the story of jazz and his personal journey through this American art form. • Jenifer Fox (MA '94) recently gave a "Discovering and Developing Your Child’s Strengths” talk as part of the Hinsdale (Ill.) High School District 86 speaker series. • Poet Jen Lighty (MA '98) was recently awarded a $1,000 Fellowship Grant by the Rhode Island State Council. She credits the Block Island Poetry Project for helping her hone her craft.

FRENCH SCHOOL

Wen-ye Ho (MA '78) writes, "In June 2011 I retired after 27 years of teaching French at Tufts Univ., and I began participating in international piano competitions for amateur pianists. In the past two years, I was fortunate enough to have won a few awards: the Chopin award in Washington, D.C. (July 2011), the Franz Liszt award as well as the Gold Medal in Seattle (October 2011), quarterfinalist in the 25th International Competition for Outstanding Amateurs in Paris (March 2012), and semifinalist in the Chicago International Competition (May 2012). Most recently I won second prize in the International Competition for Amateur Pianists in St. Petersburg, Russia (July 2013). Because of that prize, I have been asked back to give a solo recital in St. Petersburg in March." In June she has also been invited to play two concerts in St. Petersburg, both sponsored by the Russian Museum. She also has two concerts in Boston in May. • Timothy Simeone (MA '91) is a partner with the law firm of Wiltshire & Grannis in Washington, D.C. He has participated in cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, a majority of the U.S. Courts of Appeals, and a number of state supreme courts. • This year Phillip Davis (MA '05) is a new French teacher at Muskegon (Mich.) High School. He has more than 11 years of teaching experience. • We are sad to report that Anne McKenzie Joulaire, wife of longtime teacher and director of the French School Daniel Joulaire, passed away on September 8 at the age of 74. She is survived by Daniel, son Marc and wife Jennifer (Roberts) (MA '93, MA Spanish '97), daughter Claire '95 (MA German '97) and husband Guillaume, and four grandchildren. For more about Anne, see the Class of 1960 column.

GERMAN SCHOOL

Kathryn Cowin Decker ('69) retired in June 2013 from her position as a school psychologist in the San Lorenzo Unified School District (Calif.). She and her husband were looking forward to the imminent birth of their fifth grandchild. This summer they plan to relocate to the Northwest and enjoy a more relaxed and leisurely lifestyle. Visiting various national parks in the U.S. and Canada is high on their list. • Spencer Wolf (MA 11), a German language teacher at Newburyport (Mass.) High School, recently received two awards from the Massachusetts Foreign Language Assoc., the Intercultural Student Exchange Language Matters honor and the state’s German Educator of the Year award. • Marcel Reich-Ranicki, one of the most influential German literary critics of the 20th century, passed away on September 18. He taught at the German School in 1969 and wrote a note about Theodor Adorno, the eminent Frankfurt School philosopher, from Middlebury. A Polish-born Jew who grew up in Berlin and survived the Warsaw ghetto, he was a powerful cultural figure in postwar Germany and helped pave the way for Jews to again play an important role in the nation’s culture and politics.

MONTEREY INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

In September 2013 Aaron Stein (MAIPS '10) was named one of the “2013 Top 99 Foreign Policy Leaders Under 33.” The list is published by Diplomatic Courier magazine and cosponsored by Young Professionals in Foreign Policy. Aaron is a research associate at the Center for Economics and Foreign Policy Studies in Istanbul, where he works on security and proliferation issues in the Middle East. In 2012 he cofounded Turkey’s first nonproliferation and disarmament program, creating a website that he describes as "the first comprehensive collection of scholarly articles covering all aspects of Turkey’s nuclear program and policies.” Aaron is also a PhD candidate at King’s College, London, researching Iranian and Turkish nuclear decision-making. • Julie Sinclair (MFA '89) was recently honored by NAFA: Association of International Educators for her extensive volunteer work with international enrollment management. Julie is finishing her PhD from Michigan State Univ. and has been a guest speaker via Skype in Prof. Katherine Puntereny’s classes. She has also done informational interviews for students in the Institute’s MA in international education management (MAIEIM) program. • For three consecutive summers, MIIS Spanish translation and interpretation professor Cas Shulman-Mora (MATI '95) has taught and directed the International Conference Interpretation Practicum at the Universidad Internacional Menéndez Pelayo in Santander, Spain. This year Arielle Weisman (MATI '11) joined Cas as her teaching assistant for the second time, and among participants was a large contingent of current Monterey Institute students and alumni: Susana Piñón Freire (MACI '99), Laura Merino (MACI '11), Katerina Borghi (MATI '14) and Miguel Garcia (MACI '14). During the two-week course, participants practice interpreting in mute booths at live conferences held at a seaside Spanish conference center, while living and working in a former Spanish royal palace on the scenic northern coast of Spain.

SPANISH SCHOOL

Franca Arcuri Biales (MA '88) was recently re-elected to the Board of Education in Middletown, Conn. She is a high school teacher in the Middletown public school system and has three children. • In September Carrie Duff (MA '97) began a new position as the assistant principal at Fowler School in Maynard, Mass. Previously she was at Francis W. Parker Charter Essential School. • Jennifer Lumb Crowley (MA '00) joined the Spanish dept. at Duxbury (Mass.) High School this school year. She has 20 years of experience. • In Oregon Beth Keech (MA '01) also began a new position as a Spanish teacher at Marist High School in Eugene. She has more than 15 years experience. • Jennifer Johnson (MA '04) became the new assistant principal for grades 10–12 in Edgemont, N.Y., this school year. Previously she was the assistant principal for guidance in Rye. • Darrow School in New Lebanon, N.Y., welcomed new faculty this year including Jose Benitez-Melendez (MA '12), who is teaching Spanish and French. • In July Heidi Ambrozaitis (MA '12) married Cameron Hewitt in Middletown Springs, Vt. She is a foreign language instructor at Montachusett Regional Vocational Technical School in Fitchburg, Mass.
ClassActs

afford the equipment or training. She bought skis and proper clothing and taught the girls herself. The teachers at the schools have recognized significant changes in the demeanor of those students who participated. This is just one of the creative projects her foundation has carried out. • Alda and Gerry Barrington winter in Fort Myers and would like to see if there is any interest in organizing a Florida Gulf Coast Middlebury group. Please contact him at jer3cube@aol.com. • We are sorry to report the deaths of three classmates. Betty Andrews died July 27 in Pittsfield, Mass. She graduated cum laude with a major in American history. She was a member of Sigma Kappa, Women’s Forum, and the French Club, and worked on the Kaleidoscope and the Culture Conference. • Sandy Feldmann Williamson passed away on May 22. Sandy was a sociology major, and a four-year member of the Mountain Club and of the Women’s Forum. A member of Delta Delta Delta, she also was a member of the Republican Club and Christian Assoc. • We lost Anne McKenzie Jourlait on September 8 in Aix-en-Provence, France. Anne was a French major, who was the salutatorian and graduated Phi Beta Kappa and summa cum laude. She was a member of the French Club, holding the VP and president chairs. She also was involved with the Religion Conference, Christian Assoc., Mountain Club, and Women’s Forum. She earned her PhD in comparative literature at the Univ of Michigan and taught at York Univ in Toronto and at the Institute for American Universities in Aix, where she was also VP. She and husband Daniel spent every summer in Vermont from 1972–2012 while Daniel taught in and served as director of the French School. She will be sadly missed. • Vcevy and Jean remind you to send us your e-mails, press clippings, and other news.

61 Dave Gannett ’62 had the privilege of hosting Gil and Jack Westerbeke the first full week in August for the Seattle Opera’s Four-Opera production of Wagner’s Der Ring des Nibelungen, aka The Ring. They all had a grand time! • Jeff Foran has been appointed to the Tiburon (Calif) Town Council as a representative on the seven-member Belvedere-Tiburon Library Agency Board of Trustees. Jeff brings to the library agency board his skill as an experienced strategist. According to Jeff, he has a lot of ideas for the library. “I’m very interested in the use of the computer and access to information.” Jeff has served on corporate and nonprofit boards, including UNR Industries, Telosa Software, Strategic Decisions Group, Save the Children, Decision Education Foundation, and several investment funds. • Dick Harris, the director of Harbor Watch/River Watch at Earthplace in Westport, Conn., has watched that organization grow in size and influence. They manage seven rivers and two harbors and run an inventory on juvenile benthic marine fish every year on Norwalk Harbor. They also do contract work for the State of Connecticut and the Environmental Protection Agency, as well as provide educational opportunities for young scientists. In recent years they have discovered big leaks of sewage into Norwalk Harbor and Norwalk River. They’ve been working with municipalities to find and repair the problems. As in many other localities, aging infrastructure is causing these and other problems. The success of Dick’s organization causes his dilemma: whether or not to expand their needed services, which would take both continued high involvement and resources. • Dave Crowley now has a website with some of his “recollections of growing up, including flunking out of Middlebury and returning to graduate” with our class. You can read Dave’s website at davidcrowley.com. • Pete Connal reports that wife Ruth had major back surgery during the past year, which cut short some of their travel plans. He says that the titanium rods Ruth now has in her back prevent them from holding hands in a thunderstorm. Fortunately she has made a remarkable recovery and everything else is going well. • By the time you read this, Carole Pringle Tiedemann will have moved west from Rochester, N.Y., to Seattle. She sold her house in September to move closer to daughter Dana Tiedemann Hulslander ’92 and family in the Seattle area. Carole’s new address is 1602 N. Narrows Drive, Unit 7A, Tacoma, WA 98407. • I regret to inform you of the death of Eugene Sapadin on September 19 in Williston, VT. Gene was much loved by family and students. As his obituary said, he will leave a “very large Gene-shaped hole in their universe.” • Also, Richard Rubin died on September 20 in Bloomington, Ind. Richard was much loved by his family and colleagues. Our sympathy is sent to Gene and Richard’s families.

62 Congratulations to Frank Pappalardo who was awarded the 2013 Chancellor’s Award by the St. Thomas More Lawyers Guild. A charter member of the St. Thomas More Lawyers Guild, he has served as its longtime treasurer. After serving as an assistant district attorney for Monroe County, N.Y., for 10 years he went into private practice, first with his father then with his son, Frank, and daughter, Fauna. • In October the Friends of the Concord (Mass.) Library presented “New Literary Voices” and Barbara Miller Powell served as the mistress of ceremonies. She is the former director of the Concord Free Public Library and was previously the director of the Belmont (Mass.) Public Library.

Class Correspondents: Judy Borworth Roësset (jbroesset@aol.com), 8809 Mariscal Canyon Dr., Austin, TX 78759; Linda Dunphy Fischer (betsy@brentopalmer.com), 611 Oakland Ave., Iowa City, IA 52240; John Sinclair, 482 Woodbury Rd., Springfield, VT 05156.

63 The months since reunion have flashed by. Conversations with classmates yield much praise for those involved in its success and for the generation of newfound energies. It’s heartening to hear of several instances where classmates have reached out to assist one another with some of our “aging issues.” Do make it a point to check out our Middlebury Class of 1963 Facebook page. Liam English and others are doing wonders keeping that alive with real-time chat and photos. • Janet Myers Arnold reports from Leesburg, Fla., that she and husband John moved to Florida from Oregon back in 1998 and have since been enjoying the quiet life of retirees, no longer having to adhere to corporate world schedules. • Deborah Bigelow Begner of Scottsdale, Ariz., says that throughout the years she and Vera Maggia Plummer of Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y., have remained close. She had a grand time at reunion. The summer and fall seasons kept her and husband Tom busy with antique American Indian art festivals and modern Indian art exhibits associated with their business. Check out their website (www.turkey-mountain.com). • As part of our reunion gift to the College, Susan Washburn Buckley of NYC donated 173 autographed Civil War letters written by Orlando French, a member of the 75th Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the time span of September 1862–June 1865, to his wife Lydia. Susan’s gift is extensive—totaling more than 1,000 pages and including photos of both the writer and his wife. The complete collection was exhibited during Homecoming Weekend. Andy Wentink ’70, the former Special Collections archivist, returned to present his perspective on the gift as the “Crown Jewel” of the College’s extensive Civil War collection. • Rexford Brown of Denver, Colo., was unable to join us in June due to the opening of his wife Sharon’s art gallery in the heart of Denver’s River North Art District. Rex does take pride in the fact that he helped initiate a KDR 1963 pledge class gathering in 2012 in Massachusetts—one of our early mini-reunions. He still continues as a professional educator—being very much involved in the local university Academy for Lifelong Learning. Charlie Buell of Norwich, VT, is similarly involved in like activities at Dartmouth College. Contact either of these folks for ideas in your own region. • Ken Delmar of Stamford, Conn., had a showing of paintings at the George Bills Gallery in Chelsea, NYC. We have known for years of Ken’s expertise as a writer, film producer, and photographer. However we now learn of his lifelong love of painting using unique media—treated paper towels and Plexiglas panels. • Liam English of Cornwall, VT, not only maintains our Facebook exposure but also works hard on his farm. This past summer, he and wife Judy enjoyed “gunkholing” in Penobscot Bay, Maine, exploring some of the offshore islands.
John McHenry and wife Anne (Smith) ’62 of Chula Vista, Calif., not only came to reunion but have since visited Dick Hawley of Underhill, Vt. Both John and Dick started with our class but graduated in 1964, and both plan to attend the 1964 reunion. Again our class spunk has prevailed. Barry White of both plan to attend the 1964 reunion this coming June. Vista, Calif., not only came to reunion but have since Richmond, Va., also had a wonderful time on campus winter blues with a serendipitous chat or gathering. class spunk alive. Reach out to one another. Fight the association and has served as deputy provost of the New region of southwestern France for the last six years Spanier, reflecting on her college years, still enjoys and have not been back to the U.S. It has always been an interesting one. "I have been living in the Dordogne..." I'm happy to be retired. I loved what I did and making when not doing hospital duty. Why are we not surprised? Chip Hart is a very active member on the board of Housing Vermont, which creates permanently affordable rental housing for Vermonters through partnerships with local organizations, public agencies, and the private sector. When not working in the real estate business, he and wife Mary are involved with the Craftsbury Chamber Players. Sadly, we must report the death of Chris Smith following a long illness. Though he spent most of his professional career in banking, his real passion was to anonymously underwrite causes related to the environment, the disabled, the Olympics, and veteran affairs. Joe McLaughlin writes, "I had a message from Pam Reilly letting me know that Al Reilly died October 17 of cancer. He was diagnosed last summer, and unfortunately he and Pam had to withdraw an invitation to Bob Royer, Fran Love, Jed Maker, John Kingman, and me and spouses to visit them at their lodge on an island in Lake Huron, just off Michigan's Upper Peninsula, in July. Ironically, that plan was hatched at Paul Wittman's memorial service in NYC last January, when we decided that at our stage in life, waiting for a reunion every five years was getting risky. All of us but the Loves were able to get together on the planned weekend anyway at the Maker's place on a lake near Traverse City, Mich. We had a great time remembering Head and hoping and praying for the best for Alby. We were able to talk to him and Pam by phone that weekend, and Zuki and I and the Royers visited them on separate weekends early in the fall. Although he was obviously weakened by his disease, we had a lot of laughs and good memories. You may remember that Alby and Pam were married the summer after junior year, one of the first weddings in our class, and she worked in the English dept. It's a solid values. He built a great family and a great business..." 65

By the time you read this, some 28 classmates will have gathered in Middlebury to begin preliminary planning for our 50th reunion in June 2015. The group is by no means exclusive so if you'd like to participate, please let either Polly or "T" know so we can forward word of your interest to the appropriate committee chairs. Doctor, Jed Maker writes, "I'm happy to be retired. I loved what I did and might still be doing it if I could have gotten a schedule without call and longer vacations. OB in a small town doesn't work like that. I would have really let my partners down if I stopped up all the easy work and didn't keep up my share of the onerous stuff. So I let it go so they could replace me with a younger version. With 30 years there I think you should have enough brainpower." The Makers have moved back to downtown Salt Lake to be nearer their kids and grandchild with lots of activities and sports readily accessible. Jiffy Starr Johnson took her expertise as head of our WRMRC radio station and made a career out of it by broadcasting both on commercial and public radio stations in Florida and Illinois. When not giggling with her three grandchildren or quilting, she volunteers by teaching lower-income consumers how to stretch their funds..."
It Happened One Night

Even the best parties can get better, as KDR Social Chairman extraordinaire Bob Baskin ’64 discovered back in the day, when he and his frat brothers hosted an unexpected guest.
ful couple of days working on our 50th reunion and reconnecting with classmates from yesteryear. This year has been jam-packed with a trip back to Vietnam with my three kids, Lisa '89, who was born while I was there in 1967, Tucker '91, and Susannah (UVU). I returned with them to Da Nang and found a woman I had worked with long ago in Vietnam. Thanks to 'T', I have joined the Middlebury Rotary Club, which occupies my charitable energy and has allowed me to work on a school building project in Honduras. I remain in the unenviable position of having to work for a living, but enjoy my business development work with the McKernon Group, a residential design/build firm. Nice to see Chip Hart, Michael McCann, and Spence Wright '45 at the DKE alumni meeting. A large vegetable garden, occasional travel with friends, and partridge hunting with Stets (Fred Stetson) sopp up the rest of my free time. I look forward to seeing everyone at our 50th.

— Class Correspondents: R.W. "T" Tall Jr. (ahmic@shoreham.net), 204 Clark Rd., Cornwal, VT 05753. Polly Moore Walters (polly@frii.com), 100 Grandview Ave., Fort Collins, CO 80521.

We’re sad to report that Bob O’Connell, a native of St. Albans, Vt., died in July in San Francisco, where he had lived most of his adult life. After serving as a military intelligence officer in the Army, Bob went on to obtain his law degree from the Univ. of San Francisco. He had retired from a 31-year career as a lawyer. He and wife Lynn had two children. If you have memories of Bob that you’d like to share, please send them along to us for the next issue. • On a happier note, in June Carolyn Sharp Hamilton and husband Tom were awarded the Charlie Award by the Charlotte County (Fla.) Arts and Humanities Council for a “Lifetime Contribution to the Arts.” Carolyn was delighted that her father, 96-year-old Roylance Sharp, having just moved to a condo in Punta Gorda from Sun City Center, Fla., was able to participate in the award celebration. Both Carolyn and Tom have been heavily involved with the Visual Arts Center (VAC) in Punta Gorda, since retiring early in 1999. Besides taking lessons and entering exhibits, they’ve also served on the board of directors. Tom obtained a series of grants to build a technology lab and started the Peace River Film Festival two years ago. Carolyn, who is a fiber fiend and dabbles in jewelry, was a founder of the Jewelry Arts Group 10 years ago and of Common Threads, a group of over 100 fiber fiends, both part of VAC. When Hurricane Charley (no relation to the award) roared through Punta Gorda in 2005, Tom led the rebuilding committee, which created the well-equipped pottery studio and a very successful pottery program. Together they have chaired six out of the 10 monthlong fine arts festivals each fall, which each feature a famous artist. • Mark O’Reilly recently spent two weeks touring Newfoundland and visited the Sir Wilfred Grenfell Museum in St. Anthony at the end of the Northern Peninsula. Mark writes that, among the exhibits, “I was surprised to find a photo and reference to the Dog Team Tavern in Middlebury, Vt.” As some of you may remember, Grenfell was an English physician who established a medical mission serving the fishermen and their families living in remote coastal villages. After 54 years of service, Grenfell and his wife retired to Vermont and established the Dog Team as a teahouse and outlet for Newfoundland handicrafts. For more of the story, Mark refers us to Wikipedia. • In the realm of “Midd Moments,” Prue had one recently. She writes, “Out here in Michigan, especially Ann Arbor where I live, hardly anyone has ever heard of Middlebury. We are Big Blue and nothing else here. ‘Hail to the Wolverines’ is the mantra. Anyway, I’m chairing our church’s stewardship campaign for next year and I needed someone skillful to take videos for the church website. No one over 40, of course, can do this due to a lack of knowledge about equipment, formats, etc. One of my committee members suggested a Sean Hoskins, one of the younger members of church, who knows about video. That Sunday, over cake/coffee on the church terrace, I was introduced to Sean Hoskins. Sean, a tall, lithe, affable fellow, told me he is affiliated with Wayne State Univ. as an adjunct prof. We talked, and he kindly agreed to take the videos. Soon thereafter, I sent Sean an e-mail to confirm the plan and then, out of curiosity, went on the Wayne State website. Lo and behold—guess where he went to college? Mind you, one NEVER hears of anything but UM out here. That’s right—my new best friend, Sean, was raised in Vermont and went to Middlebury, Class of 2002. Highlight of my day!” We welcome hearing about the “Midd Moments” you’ve experienced!

— Class Correspondents: Prue Frey Heikkinen (phoheikkinen@att.net), 1914 Wayne Street, Ann Arbor, MI 48104. Francine Clark Page (fpages@myfairpoint.net), 19 Brigham Hill Ln., Essex Junction, VT 05452.

Correspondent Alex Taylor reports: Our intrepid class correspondent and reunion organizer Susie Davis Patterson was recuperating this past autumn after taking a fall while leading a hike on Mt. Mansfield. In her absence, we asked some classmates to bring us up to date on their activities. But first a report from Jim Adams about Susie’s mishap. “As most of us know, Susie is hiker and climber extraordinaire, having climbed or hiked most peaks in Vermont and a number in other parts of the world. In August, she challenged one of the steepest, rockiest trails on the west side of Mt. Mansfield. On her descent, she tripped, landed squarely on her left shoulder and bumped her head on a rock. Friends trained in first aid attended to her while two mountain rescue teams were summoned to remove her from the mountain, a five-hour process. At the time of this writing (September), Susie was lying in bed with a severely shattered humerus. So shattered, in fact, that it was not possible to surgically repair it; her orders were to lie still. A number of Middlebury friends, including Sue Rugg Parmenter, Freddie Mahlmann, Carol Collin Little, Pat Hickcox, Linda Morse, Livvy Barbour Tarleton, Kathy Towle Hession, and myself and wife Barbara, as well as other friends in the Burlington, Vt., area assisted with food and support. Her primary caregiver was husband Tom, who incidentally retired from a long teaching career at UVM only to find that his immediate retirement activities included nursing!” And checking in with Susie in November, we learned that she was healing well and doing daily physical therapy with a goal of being ready to cross-country ski by January 1. Complete bone growth will take a year and the final test will be if she can still slalom water ski on Lake Dunmore next summer. Classmates are invited to come to her camp and be witnesses. • Residents of Painter Hall in 1963 recall that Jon Berger showed up for freshman orientation with a canoe paddle. Well, on his 68th birthday, Jon completed a 220-mile canoe trip with an old guiding partner in the Temagami forest of northeast Ontario, lasting 20 days. Jon is coauthor of Canoe Atlas of the Little North, available on Amazon for $69.60, and he continued to sketch while on his trip. He still maintains his day job as the IT director of a center city Philadelphia law firm, specializing in discovery data hosting for several hundred law firms. • Bob and Kathy Landry Geckle are both healthy and busy in Newtown, Conn. Kathy has for years been involved with a variety of town boards and commissions. During her business career, she was an interior designer with Ethan Allen, designing new galleries and updating existing galleries at showrooms throughout the U.S. Bob has retired from a career in international business and has also served on corporate and local boards. In the wake of the shooting at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, he was named coordinator for corporate donor funds. He reports that the aftermath of the shootings has truly been one of the most difficult periods of their lives. Three of their grandchildren attend Newtown schools, and while they are safe, many of their friends’ families were not. • Huck Fairman is starting a new one, focused, in part, on a Midd reunion among our Princeton chapter of the Citizens Climate Lobby, whose main focus is building support for a carbon tax. We write letters to papers and meet with politicians and editors. I also write a guest column for the local Princeton Packet newspaper on projects people are doing to support the environment. I was saddened to learn of the death of Pamela Parsons Naughton ’68. She was one of my favorite schoolmates, joyous and positive, and was married to actor James Naughton. • Peter Kovner has read the latest book by Gary Margolis, Winter 2014 73
Julia Proctor '06 and Phil Aronenu '06 were married on August 18, 2012, surrounded by friends and family on a mountainside in the bride’s hometown of Oquossoc, Maine. Middlebury friends helped keep the dance floor moving and campfire grooving into the wee hours: (all ’06 unless noted) Austen Levihn-Coon ’07, Daniel Berkman, Caitlin Dennis, Kate Elias, Asher Burns-Burg ’05, the newlyweds, May Boeve, Caitlin Connolly Hoffman, Retta Leaphart, Jeremy Osborn, Tara Giordano ’02, Jessica Nichols Army ’07, Kelly Blynn ’07, (second row) David Wright ’05, Jon Warnow, Michael Silverman ’02, Bill McKibbon (scholar in residence), Jamie Henn ’07, Sean Lena, Hannah Giles, Meghan Nesmith, Lucas Kavner, Judith Dry ’09, Emily Feldman ’09, Alec Strum ’08, Daniel Eichner ’04, Elizabeth Baer ’04, Ellen Whelan-Wuest ’05, Conor Stinson, Andrew Zox ’05, Bill Army ’07, Mike Ives, and Liz Somes. On September 8, 2012, the wedding of Jay Boren ’06 and Emily Adler ’07 took place at the Adler place at Hulet’s Landing on Lake George, N.Y. Many friends and family celebrated with the couple: Benjy Adler ’03, Churchill Franklin ’71, Janet Halstead Franklin ’72, Andy Rossmeissl ’05, Lauren Markham ’05, Carol Guest ’07, Lindsey Franklin ’07 (maid of honor), Angela Evanice ’09, Olivia Lew ’07, the newlyweds, Katie Hawkins ’06, Caitlin Littlefield ’07, Heidi Erbe ’06, Emily Wheeler ’07, Brooke Lenci Clark ’06, Jane Mackey Foster ’06, Zach Foster ’06, Ted Adler ’99, Christine Kenny Nesbit ’94, Anjelika Pananjie ’05, Robbie Adler ’05, Dadd Cosgrove ’72, Hannah Epstein ’05, (second row) Patrick Phillips ’06, Hubert d’Autremont ’07, Jon Warnow ’06, Steven Chester ’07, Lucas Kavner ’06, Scott Schwartz ’07, Kelly Blynn ’07, Lauren Miller ’07, RJ Adler ’11, David Jackson ’06, Jamie Henn ’07, Hunter Stuart ’06, and David Temple ’05. Missing from photo: Carrie Nazzaro ’05.

Peter Knobler sent a correction to his class note that appeared in the fall issue. “It was the great New Orleans philosopher Jesse Hill who sang ‘Ooh Poo Pah Doo’ not ‘Ooh Doo Da Doo’ as was printed. His philosophy was ‘I won’t stop trying till I create disturbance in your mind.’ I love the idea of creating disturbance in your mind. He was looking to make general waves, not just one. Me too.” Thanks, Peter, and sorry for the typos. As another reviewer wrote, ‘The book reads like a narrative will suddenly shift into a singular illumination of a moment and scene. Gary creates an odyssey that swells (and ebbs) with insights, people, and landscapes, where it takes forever and a day to travel to ‘there.’ And still, the heart of the book is in remembrance for those our friend Gary encounters—from then to now, from Brookline to Middlebury, from there to here—of what is shared and withheld, what is gained and lost—and by all of us. ‘We walked the same earth, respectfully, in partnership.’”

—Class Correspondents: Susan Davis Patterson (sdp@alumni.middlebury.edu), 67 Robinson Pkwy, Burlington, VT 05401; Alex Taylor (ataylor1145@gmail.com), 215 Wells Hill Rd., Lakeville, CT 06039.

Leif Magnusson sent this update: “Charlotte (Sibley) ’68 and I have been having a lot of satisfying fun with Midd activities lately. We attended her reunion last June. We saw many dear friends and enjoyed a nice chat with Ron Leibowitz. I had a fine breakfast with Paul Nelson, who taught political philosophy and now runs the chamber music series there. I rather doubt I’ll be able to make it to our reunion. It has just worked out that our Midd reunions have been with her class lately. I do look forward to hearing about ours. I will dearly miss catching up with friends there. All is well down here in Pennsylvania. I stopped practicing...”

On August 18, 2012, Jake Kritzer ’95 married Brooke Baldwin on the shores of Damariscotta Lake in Maine. Friends from the Class of 1995 who joined the couple included Zac Laidley, Brendan Fitzsimons, Cisco Heller, the newlyweds, Scott Schwitz ’07, Scott Schwartz ’07, Kelly Blynn ’07, Lauren Miller ’07, RJ Adler ’11, David Jackson ’06, Jamie Henn ’07, Hunter Stuart ’06, and Emily Adler Boren ’07.
law since we moved here from Andover eight years ago. I'm finishing a book that my mother wrote on her families and keeping the home fires burning. Charlotte is on corporate boards and just recently agreed to head the Mendelsohn Club Chorus board in Philadelphia. I tell people that we now live in the South. I must say, Middlebury sure is a beautiful place and now seems to be swelling with success and prosperity. It's great to observe and celebrate its successes.

- Sam Bacon

writes, "I continue at Blair Academy as the dean of academics, now completing 23 years at Blair and 42 in independent schools. Eldest child Willa (32) is a parent of Bea and Millie and expecting number three in Lebanon, Pa., with husband Patrick. Tim (35) works in NYC for Deutsche Bank and is engaged to be married in 2014. Natalie (17) is finishing her junior year at Blair, so there is one more set of tuitions to get through. Natalie is probably the most interesting of the lot here: service trip to Kenya in June, with July spent at RISD. Betsy and I went to Bequia last spring and I guess if I had to pick a place to spend the cold months, it would be there!" • From Colorado Harland Ranney sent this e-mail to Anne Harris Onion: "Just a short e-mail to thank you for your efforts as the class correspondent for our year. My wife and I visited the campus several autumns ago and were impressed by the many new buildings, noting changes, like no more Crest Room with 10-cent ice cream cones. Remembering the WWII Quonset hut that served as the geography dept. facility, the massive new building to the north was truly eye-opening."

- Wendy Cole

writes, "I'm still working during the ski season at Deer Valley—after an injury, this side note: my surgeon was Eric Heiden of 1980 Lake Placid Olympic fame for five gold medals in speed skating! He has a practice here in Park City. My daughter and I spent two amazing weeks at Machu Picchu and the Galápagos in November, a bucket list trip for sure and I do recommend it! I camped and kayaked in the San Juan Islands of Washington State recently, and I go to Arizona several times a year to visit family and friends, but just staying home here in Park City is like a free vacation! Elinor Livingstone Redmond, Jackie Ogden English, Lynn Markham Beebe, Julia Lord Soule and I met at Elinor's home in Maine last fall, and we're planning another yearly get-together. I'm still obsessed with birds and enjoy my work with the Utah Mountain Bluebird Trails every summer. I'm not a grandmother yet, although I do love my two grandcats!"

- Correspondent Peter Reynolds reports: Living on the shore of Lake Champlain, I'm spending time on the road accompanying my wife on her work travels. We took a three-week September train trip to Chicago, New Orleans, and D.C., departing and returning from the Amtrak stop across the lake from our house. We had a chance to visit with Seth and Clara Johnson '71 Pincus in New Orleans and with Linda Eakeley Duncan in her new digs in Alexandria, Va. Watch out. I may end up in your neighborhood.

I also ran into Elinor Redmond at the Northeast Regional Beekeepers Conference in Burlington. • Be sure to check out our class's Facebook page before reunion to see who's coming!

- Class Correspondents: Anne Harris Onion (aonion27@gmail.com), PO Box 207, Gilmanton, NH 03257; Peter Reynolds (preny@verizon.net), 493 Stillmeadow Ln., Addison, VT 05443.

70 Beth Prasse Seeley writes, "Rich and I finally sold our home in Gloucester, Mass., in September, so now we are full-time residents of Silverthorne, Colo. We live within 45 minutes of seven world-class ski areas (including Vail and Breckenridge), and we love to visit with Midd friends when they come out this way to ski—so keep me posted when/if you come to Colorado! We've enjoyed catching up with Dave and Elsa Parrington '71 Desrochers, as well as Harry and Lynn Francis '71 Zinn at Steamboat over the past year. I also saw Joyce Snyder Rappaport at her home in Hilton Head in November, as we celebrated our Medicare birthdays!" • Sidney Marsh Moon will retire from her position as associate dean in the College of Education at Purdue University in Indiana this spring. She and husband Doug Sprengle plan to spend the following year hiking, biking, kayaking, and snowshoeing in Steamboat Springs, Colo., where their vacation property is located. After that, who knows? • Paul Bohlen writes, "Sallie and I moved to our new home in Wamego, Kan., in April 2012 and have been enjoying being closer to daughter Kate and husband and four grandchildren (three boys and one girl) in Clay Center. We also Skype weekly (and visit about yearly) with son David and wife and two grandchildren (one boy and one girl) since they live in Kashmir, India. Sallie and I were in Essex, Vt., for my nephew's wedding in October and I saw the Vermont fall colors in person for the first time since 1969. I'm now on my third career since graduation and 23 years in the Army and 17 years teaching high school. I serve as a financial specialist who helps families and businesses set up their own private financing system for all of their financial needs for things like cars, vacations, equipment, inventory, college, retirement, homes, etc., so they can receive the profits from their spending that others had been receiving. Since I work mainly from home over the Internet, I have great flexibility to serve them and enjoy my family at the same time. Since I do this nationwide, I would be happy to assist my former classmates. The best way to contact me is by e-mail: pnbohlen@gmail.com."

- Andy Wentink

writes, "My last day as curator of Special Collections and College Archives at Middlebury was June 30. Most of the time since then was spent doing whatever I could to close on the sale of my house in Cornwall (finalized on September 27), which I have owned for 22 years, to resettle into my new home in Teaneck, N.J., and to formulate plans for my next stage of researching, writing, editing, teaching, etc. Before moving into the next phase, however, I made a long overdue West Coast tour and, among other connections, met with three classmates after many years: Alan Carter after four years, Tom DeRogatis after 38 years, and Fred Shepardson after 43 years, since we graduated from Middlebury. What a miracle our Midd experience was, that classmates should be able to reconnect like family as if no time had passed! I, for one, am grateful."

- Nancy Heller is still enjoying the opportunity to give guest lectures at various places. In the fall she presented two for the Smithsonian Associates, in D.C., and one at the Montgomery (Ala.) Museum of Fine Arts. In February she'll be presenting a paper at a session of the College Art Assoc.'s annual conference in (brrrrr) Chicago. Other than that, she's still teaching art history (at the Univ. of the Arts, Philadelphia), spending as much time as possible with her husband, Bob Regan (not a Midd Kid but quite wonderful nonetheless), and occasionally having the great pleasure of going to dinner with Leif Magnusson '69 and Charlotte Sibley '68. Last summer, Nancy and Bob got to spend some time with, and eat a sumptuous meal created by, Jonathan Hodgkin '69 and his wife. In October Nancy represented Middlebury at the inauguration of the president of Temple University. • Jack Rudnick sent this update: "I was named a professor of practice at Syracuse Univ. College of Law and director of the Technology Commercialization Program. I've been an adjunct professor at the college since 1999. I was also named the director of New York State's Science and Technology Law Center. We teach second- and third-year law students the experience of moving technology into the market. The students work with real companies and real technology to help them find the path, if one even exists. So, I'm back where I started in 1970 going to law school." • This paragraph appeared in the coverage of Commencement 2013 on the College's website: "Among the senior class was one student familiar with the challenges that follow college. A member of the Class of 1970, Howard Sorett is a sociologist/anthropology major who left Middlebury having completed all his academic work except for his thesis. Deciding that he wanted his degree, Sorett fulfilled his remaining requirement this year and proudly accepted his diploma with the Class of 2013 at age 64."

- Class Correspondents: Beth Prasse Seeley (beth@seeley.com); Nancy Crawford (ncrawford@utclijfe@comcast.net).

71 This will be the Medicare birthday year for most of us. Who's retired or retiring? Who's not ready to stop yet? Catch us up. • Kitty Bean Yancey has retired after 30 years at USA Today, during most of which she had one of the all-time coolest jobs, leisure travel writer. Posting on Facebook about accepting a buyout, she said, "Without USA Today, I never would have driven a muscle car on a track at 126 mph, been picked up off the ground (not nicely) by Justin Timberlake’s bodyguard, gotten an early look at the very moving 9/11 memorial at Ground Zero in NYC, been sent on a three-week tour of Europe to do any stories I chose to do, talked my way into a South Carolina prison to interview James Brown, did stretching exercises next to Candice Bergen at the Golden Door spa, sat down with the Eat, Pray, Love medicine man in Bali, and spent more time in Vegas than most compulsive gamblers.” Kitty said she plans some R&R, probably followed by some freelancing and perhaps some consulting. We wish her the best.

• Peter Wood writes, “I have taken early retirement from the Maine Medical Center Physician-Hospital Organization (PHO) after being its executive director for 18-plus years. We developed a number of programs and structures that will position the PHO’s hospitals and physicians for the future of accountable care and global risk sharing. In April, I received the Maine
Quality Counts’ Quality Improvement Leadership Award. Given the work we have done at the PHO over the last 10 years, I have been asked to do some consulting in New England and nationwide, which I will do—but on my schedule. Ellen planned to retire in late 2013 and our time is filling up with trips and visits to our daughters’ families (including five grandchildren) in Missouri. We reached the 500 mark in SCUBA dives on Thanksgiving Day 2012, but we think it might be time to turn to other interests after 20 years of successful diving all over the world. I still make at least one hike a year in the White Mountains and plan to do more.
We continue to spend a week every September on Mt.
Desert Island hiking and hiking. Best wishes to all.”

We report with regret the death of Betsy Eckfeldt on Aug. 13 at her home in Roxbury, Vt. Betsy taught pre-school at Waitsfield Elementary School for many years.
According to an obit placed by the family, she and husband Norm Vandal lived in a house that they began building 40 years ago, “surrounded by their flower and vegetable gardens, and trails through the woods where they walked, skied, and snowshoed.” Betsy also was a library trustee and grant writer, a creator of literacy programs for the Vermont Humanities Council, a summer camp director, and a yoga teacher. From the obit:
“One of Betsy’s greatest pleasures was teaching yoga and mindfulness meditation to youngsters. In her carase as a teacher, she learned how helpful yoga postures
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy
and mindfulness can be to children, particularly those
with special needs.” In addition to her husband, Betsy completed active military service and received a master’s in foreign affairs at the Univ. of Virginia. He was hired by the Defense Intelligence Agency as a China ground forces and logistics analyst. Some of his experiences included getting to fly in helicopters in the Berlin

Air Traffic Control Zone over the Soviet Zone; patrol the Berlin Wall; meet fellow officers in exchanges in European pine forests; serve as a defense diplomat in arms control negotiations ending the Cold War; graduate from the Inter-American Defense College; play a part in ending the 1998 Peru-Ecuador Conflict; work in the Middle East peace process; stare down an AK-47’s business end in the Middle East; and get to study and write about history, aviation, and railroads. Mark retired from federal service in January 2012. He immediately “reinvented” himself as a contract consulting instructor in aviation security for the Montreal-and Geneva-based International Air Transport Association’s Training and Development Institute. He also substitute teaches high school Spanish, German, and French, as well as social studies and he does Spanish language international security curriculum development and translating. Having taught himself
Brazilian Portuguese, he does similar work for Brazil.
He and his wife Leeann are living in Herndon, Va., about three miles from Dulles Airport. They have two grown daughters and are grandparents of a lovely six­ year-old granddaughter. They’re always eager to hear from Middlebury folks and are eager to get involved in Middlebury leadership activities including giving a winter term course! His e-mail is mark.carolla@gmail.
com. • Sylvia Lasmon Hutchinson sent word that she has published Spiritual Bedrock: Reclaiming Your Inner Connection to Truth, her first book. She and husband David live in northern Vermont and live by the principles discussed in the book.

—Class Correspondents: Jennifer Hamlin Church
(jhchurch@sienaheights.edu); Evey Zmudsky LaMont (evelamont@primetimetransition.com).

New correspondent Lisa Donati Mayer writes, "In the Meeting Midd-Stream book, which I still take out and reread from time to time, I described myself as having been, contentedly enjoying and astounding, even with some of the inevitable change as my retirement date and I move closer together, I certainly hope that part of my time will be occupied by reading updates and news from you!"
—Class Correspondents: Deborah Schneider Greenhut
(ldmayer@aol.com); Lisa Donati Mayer
(ldmayer@aol.com).

Mark Carolla sends us news of what he has been doing these last four decades, and it has been an interesting ride. Mark mately 15 settings, including the Western Maryland State Correctional Institution as part of its Veteran's Day program for inmates who had been honorably discharged from the Armed Services. Jane, who recently finished her master’s in accounting, also reports that along with her husband, Marlon Barnes, “We are experiencing a grandchild explosion. Our first grandchild is a 14-year-old great soccer player who was joined two years ago by another. From December 2012 to August 2013 we welcomed three new grandchildren to the family. Most likely not a world record, but pretty darned exciting to us.” E-mail: janenmar@embarqmail.com.

Michael Ratpojanakul ’06 married Caryn LoCastro ’07 in Mamaroneck, N.Y., on August 18, 2012. Many Midd friends were on hand to celebrate with the couple: the newlyweds, Stephen Ratpojanakul ’06, (second row) Ryan Tomberg ’07, Lindsay Horner Tomberg ’07, Maura Case Testaverde ’07, Aly Putnam ’07, Erica Goodman ’06, Andrea LaRocca ’06, Hannah Delong ’06, Jess Van Wagenen O’Rielly ’06, Ben Bruno ’06, Adam Swick ’06, (third row) Dave Schoenholtz ’07, Liz Vazquez ’07, Virginie Roveillo ’07, Brett Crane ’07, Eric Merkelson ’06, Micah Gurard-Levin ’07, Josh Feldman ’06, Justin Golenbock ’06, Laura Silverman ’07, Sam Ternes ’07, Calvin Garner ’06, Lelia Yerxa ’06, and Ben Lowenburg ’06. Missing from photo: Kirsten Nagel ’06 and Eric Roseman ’06.

Braden Rosenberg ’11 and Mindy Marquis ’11 were married on September 1, 2012, at Jackson’s Lodge in Canaan, Vt. Midd friends who joined the bride and groom in celebrating the night away, drinking Matt Bigl’s homebrewed beer, and lounging late at night by a fire included (all ’11 unless noted) Megan Nesbeth, Rachael Jennings, Sean Mann-O’Halloran ’12, the newlyweds, Emily Rosenkrantz (second row) Will Surrette ’10, Sgt. Chris Thompson (Public Safety), Tommy Mayell, Julie Tschirhart, James Schwerdtman, Gregg Miller, Matt Bigl ’10, Harrison Brown, John Spencer ’10, Courtney Mazzai, Graeme Rosenberg ’09, Xian Chiang-Waren, Joe Fallica ’10, Madeline Dubner, Luke Rahpson, David Cha ’10, and Ming Chan.

Several friends from the Class of ’76 got together for a mini-reunion. Check out a photo on page 81. • Send us your news!

—Class Correspondents: Gene O’Neill (otis2012@optonline.net); Betsy Sherman Walker (bswipi$@aol.com).

Several friends from the Class of ’76 gathered at the home of Bessie Cromwell Speers ’86 in Simsbury, Conn., for a Middlebury Hartford Club alumnae luncheon: Bessie, Carol Osborn Moger ’51, Mary Porter Wright ’79, Carol Morrison Bingham ’81, and Karen Mayfield Seymour ’80.

Winter 2014
works in Killington, Vt., which she loves, "with the ski world, mountains, and sights like bears here and there." She still performs music (mainly rock and some folk and blues) with a trio called Three Way Street, as well as doing other projects. She has been involved in helping feral and long-term stray cats for many years and volunteers as an advocate with Downeast Emergency Medicine Institute (DEEMI), a search and rescue group. When a person goes missing, Annie contacts the family to ask if they would like DEEMI to assist in the search. She has two adult sons, Luke and Tyler. She writes, "In the late '80s, Carol Youngs Reed and I were in LazyBoy and the Recliners and we tried to put the band back together about three years ago. It was a joy to sing and play music with Carol again and always has been! My freshman roommate, Susie Tracy Moore '78, found me on Facebook and I crashed their reunion last summer with Susie's invite. It was wonderful to see Susie! Although raining some, it was a beautiful night, under the tents and with fireworks and music. We went to Pearson's Lounge afterward and while we stood outside on the steps, the weather cleared, the night was gorgeous, and classmates were sitting on the lawn, or in Adirondack chairs and on the stairs looking out over that the Château and Battell, like old times. Some of the most intelligent, well-worded conversations and hilarious humor took place once again! The Midd spirit is alive and always inspiring!" • Marion Taylor has founded her own gap-year consulting business working with both high school and college students interested in taking time out to explore outside the traditional educational setting. Perfect for a February admit at Midd! International and domestic opportunities in travel and language immersion, and environmental and wilderness programs. Check out her website: taylorstgap.com. • Kate Manning has a second novel out entitled My Notorious Life. She writes, "I'm pretty psyched to see that it has been getting some great reviews. O, The Oprah Magazine called it 'a daring page-turner,' and Sara Nelson, editor at Amazon, said it's 'a big fat fierce novel that begins with a scene so provocative we dare you to try to stop reading.' (Hope you'll take that dare.) Otherwise, the youngest of our three kids has escaped our clutches and is off to college, and I'm teaching sporadically (at the wonderful Bard High School Early College in Manhattan) and working on a new book. This current one would never have been written without a longtime writing partnership—since freshman year at Midd!—with my dear friend, the children's book author Roberta Baker. It happily brought me back in touch with old Middlebury friends Anne Orrick Barton and my unforgettable freshman roommate Janet Jones Shippe, who, much to my delight, showed up to surprise me at bookish events in Connecticut." For more about Kate's book, see page 56. • Thanks to everyone who sent us information. We really want to hear from the rest of you!

— Class Correspondents: Debbie Fish Butler (midd54@butler.gmail.com); Alice Lee Openshaw (alice. openshaw@gmail.com).

Henry Pitney writes, "I am in the midst of a career transition after a number of years as a lawyer in public service in the international development arena. I'm working on a new business, which as we know is inherently risky. Therefore, I am also keeping my nose to the ground for interesting legal and corporate executive jobs. Inadequate time to study Chinese and Spanish! As they say in those languages, kexi and que latitum (unfortunately and regrettably)!" • Ann Teasdale is living between Nantucket, Mass., and Carbondale, Colo. "I have just sent my eldest daughter to Bates. My younger is a sophomore at Colorado Rocky Mountain School. I have two shops on Nantucket in the core district, Annie and the Teds and Three Girls and a Dog. Stop in if in the neighborhood."

As of this issue, Susie Rohrhardt Strapper has stepped down as a class correspondent and Annie Hartmann Philbrick and Robin Howe are joining Annie Cowherd Kallaher. Many thanks to Susie for all her years as a correspondent!

— Class Correspondents: Anne Cowherd Kallaher (annie.cowherd@att.net); Robin Howe (robinhowe.art@gmail.com); Annie Hartmann Philbrick (chapin802@gmail.com).
quality of life for people with advanced dementia. Namaste is a Hindu term that means "to honor the spirit within." The program seeks to engage residents and their families in activities that facilitate connection, enjoyment, and peace in this latter stage of life. She is studying to become a licensed nursing assistant and hopes to pass the state licensing exam at the end of January. She'll soon begin classes in prerequisites she needs to apply to nursing school.

Sim Hutner has taken his new film, Harlem Street Singer, which he directed and edited, on the road. St. Louis, NYC, Anchorage, and Boston have been some of the stops. At the St. Louis International Film Festival, it won the Audience Choice Award for Best Documentary!

In November, the film made its UK debut at the Leeds International Film Festival. It's a documentary about the Reverend Gary Davis, who was blind since birth and was an early blues performer who had large influence on all folk and blues musicians who came after him, including the Grateful Dead's Bob Weir, David Bromberg, and Peter, Paul, and Mary's Peter Yarrow.

Marcy Pomerance and I (Elaine King Nickerson) attended the showing in Boston and saw, in addition to the director (and his adorable four-year-old son, Simeon), John Harris and Peter Doelger. In November at "sold out for weeks in advance," Jay Petrow was a lucky ticket holder. Oh and Sim and wife Lucy also have a baby girl, Julia, born in August!

—Class Correspondents: Carolyn Bauch (cbausch@verizon.net); Elaine King Nickerson (eknick@aol.com); Marcy Parlow Pomerance (pomerance@comcast.net).

Jonathan Kamien writes, "I'm living in Malvern, Pa., with my wife of 23 years, Leslie Amass, and my daughter of 5.5 years, Sklar Kamien Amass. Parenthood, following 17 years of being DINKS, is a trip!" Judy Bonzi writes, "In September, I was a presenter for Pecha Kucha Rockland—Pecha Kucha (chitchat in Japanese) is an event where presenters from a variety of fields tell the story of their work using 20 slides and 20 seconds per slide. Also my table, Rorschach's Table, was in Fine Woodworking in the fall and is being exhibited in Maine Wood 2014."

Ginia Van Vranken Zibro writes, "I'm happy to be a Midd parent. My son, Geoffrey, is settling into Battell North. I was so confused when I entered the dorm as they have turned my old room into the Commons office! It took me a while to realize why my bearings were off. He even has one of my professors for his freshman seminar course. I am so looking forward to having an excuse to visit more often. Our next reunion will be the year Geoffrey graduates. My dad is on the same Midd reunion cycle, too. How fun will that be?"

Laura TenBrooke Rumbough writes, "We still love living here near Middlebury—it's been five years now! Doug and I are really enjoying the empty-nester-thing. We're taking advantage of all that life up here has to offer—great hiking, hiking, College events, and skiing. I'm excited to welcome my busy season, advising families about camps and summer programming, and I'll be hosting camp fairs in Darien, Conn., and on Long Island this winter. Doug's new venture, ADK Packworks, is doing great! Located in Vergennes, it's an innovative bag company, reinventing the traditional Adirondack Packbasket. If any friends and classmates are passing through Midd this winter, please look us up. We'd love to see you!"

Hal and Ann Murphy Burroughs report, "Our oldest son, Charlie, graduated a year ago from Oberlin College with a major in environmental studies. He is now working at the Danforth Plant Science Center, a nonprofit research organization. He's living in St. Louis, so we enjoy seeing him often. Our middle child, Tim, is a senior at the Univ. of Michigan, where he is double majoring in economics and art history, which pleases both of his parents. Last summer he enjoyed an internship at Sotheby's in NYC. Who knows where he'll end up after graduation? Our youngest, Molly, just started her freshman year at Williams. She's on the crew team and will run track this spring. She's enjoying life on campus and we're glad for an excuse to visit New England. Hal has become quite a cyclist and completed America's Most Beautiful Ride, a century ride around Lake Tahoe, last June with his sister. I'm now working at the St. Louis Art Museum full time and would love to take any Midd visitors on a tour of our new building!"

Dave and Carol O'Connor-Fischer dropped their youngest son off at UVM last August for his first year. They report majestic mountain views from his dorm window and hope great thoughts will be inspired. They took advantage of being there to visit Middlebury and check out the campus, which was in pristine shape for the incoming class.

—Class Correspondents: Wendy Bebringer Nelson (gomonog@bellouth.net); Caleb Rick (crick@northcommon.com).

With the winter edition of the magazine, we (Victoria Seiden Gonin and Allison Burroughs) take over as class correspondents. Many, many thanks to Siobhan Leahy Ulrich and Ruth Kennedy for doing such awesome work with this column for so many years! Anne Sudkamp is designing and manufacturing clothing accessories with a northern flair from Alaska. One kid is away at college (Bates), and one attends a local high school. A husband, two dogs, and, occasionally, a cat round out home life in the far. Todd Miller has been living in Burlington, Vt., for 25 years and remains amazed that it has been 30 years since our Midd graduation. He's doing some freelance writing and is (finally) using his history degree more now than he did during his previous 20-year career at UVM's College of Medicine. Meredith Anderson lives in Boston and works at the Cambridge office of a British consulting firm as the U.S. payroll manager. She went to Buenos Aires on vacation, fell in love with the tango, and now takes tango lessons. She also volunteers as a docent with Boston by Foot. The Dark Side of Boston is the new tour she's giving. If anyone wants to hear about disease, murder, the mafia, rat baiting, or grave robbing, let her know! She gets together frequently with German "Skip" Crisostomo, who is a psychiatrist and also living in Boston.

In Massachusetts, Kathy Petlon Murphy loves living on the Cape with husband Tom and son Andrew and works as a French and Spanish teacher at Dennis-Yarmouth Regional High School. Andrew is a high school senior and applied to Midd. Kathy and Tom would love to see any members of the Class of '83, who want to visit the Cape! John Nelson is also offering hospitality! He has been pastor at Niantic (Conn.) Community Church for six years. He earned a Doctor of Ministry in preaching at Chicago Theological Seminary a few years back. When he and Angela get time off they spend it in Great Barrington, Mass., where they have a house with a big kitchen and good space for guests!

Roy Giarrusso has been enjoying Middlebury again! Son Tim is a sophomore and on the lacrosse team. They are optimistic that their youngest son, Harry, will also attend Midd and are very much looking forward to having both boys up there and playing together. His oldest, Emmy, is a vocalist finishing up at Berklee College of Music in Boston. Roy celebrated the 20th anniversary of his law firm, Giarrusso Norton Cooley & McGlone, with his three partners this past summer. He is an environmental trial lawyer and actually uses what he learned at Midd as an environmental studies major.

Ellen Hereford Thompson is still reliving the fun moments from our 30th reunion. She and Nina Beardsley Itin and Rachel Gryenberg are all live in Colorado and all managed to make it back to Midd! On the Thursday before reunion, they stopped by Bunny Mauran Merrill's farm to meet up with CC Bitting Cunningham, and Betsy Briggs Feighan for their very own soap-making demonstration. Bunny and Peter Merrill have a company called Elmore Mountain Farm. Check out all their great goat milk products on their website. Per Ellen: "For all those who couldn't make the reunion: watch out! Ted Truscott and I am vowing to get double the amount of people to come to the 35th—mark your calendars now!"

Carey MacFarland Lennox reports that while many—though not all—of our classmates are shipping their children off to college, she and husband Scott are busy with extremely energetic Mac (12), who is currently navigating the roller coaster of middle school. He was very disappointed not to come to the 25th reunion and visit Peter and Bunny's farm, where he loved fishing, frog hunting, and milking the goats after our 25th reunion. Carey is in her 18th year at Holly Hunt, a.k.a. the crazy world of design and custom furniture/fabric/lighting, etc. She is thankful for all her French and Italian classes at Middlebury when trying to deal with the foreign designers. She and her family love Chicago and would love to catch up with any Midd visitors! Although Pam Chasek was unable to make it to our reunion, she did meet up with Sue Bayer Kotila in San Jose, Calif, in April and Hugh Coyle in New York in June. She is now a full professor of international relations at Manhattan College in the Bronx and continues to edit the Earth Negotiations Bulletin on UN environmental negotiations. She traveled to five new countries this past year, after 18 years of limited travel while raising Sam (a freshman at Oberlin) and Kai (10th grade): Ecuador and the Galápagos Islands with her students, Japan for a conference, and South Korea, Jamaica, and Seychelles for UN meetings. The sixth edition of her textbook, Global Environmental Politics, came out in July. But perhaps her proudest moment was watching Sam win awards and graduate from the Bronx High School of Science in June, having successfully completed 13 years in the NYC public school system.

Sue Kotila was sorry to have missed reunion. Her oldest son, Andrew, graduated from Gettysburg College, and they were in Pennsylvania for his graduation. She was happy she got to see Midd friends who made it out to California this year (Renee Shattuck Haynes and Pam Chasek). Daughter Emma is at CSU Stanislaus, and Sue’s youngest, Matthew, is gearing up for the whole college search. They just got a couple of kayaks and are having fun taking them out. Please try to keep us posted on what you are up to. We’d love to hear from as many of you as possible this year. Lots of interesting doings with our class as we all continue to mature like a fine Bordeaux wine!

---

REUNION CLASS

Margot Mann writes, “To my joy and amazement both my children are now at Middlebury: Eric ’15 and Julia Hass ’17. They’re loving it. It’s been fun to see it through their eyes and to witness how a great college has evolved into something even more: the exquisitely appointed college of wisdom and community, and variety of intellectual experiences are more vivid than ever. It was also great to catch up with Liz Robinson and to bump into Mike Maxwell and Brian O’Day at move-in weekend in the fall.” Elizabeth Eppe Winton adds: Finally, please be sure to mark your calendars for June 6–8. We will be celebrating our 30th reunion! Sally Burke McNamara, Tom Steinle, and I are coordinating the Class of 1984 reunion planning—so do what you can to join us. The more the merrier!

---

Greetings to our fellow Midd 1985 classmates! For many of us, this was the BIG 5-0 year, and there seems to be comfort among us that we are not alone in this milestone in our lives. To celebrate the big event, a group of “Midd Goddesses” (Nancy Urner-Berry, Debbie Payne, Jennifer Karin Sidford, Toni Mauck Butterfield, Debbie Tripp Budden, and Laura Bull Bailey) collectively celebrated their 50th birthdays in the White Mountains of New Hampshire by zip-lining the tree tops of Bretton Woods, hiking in Franconia, and enjoying Saint Germain cocktails poolside at the home of Toni Butterfield. Now that’s how you do it, girls! Matt Dawson’s travel schedule in 2013 was busy: “I’ve been working on the design of a new science center in Tianjin, China, a new film museum in Donyang, China, and an overhaul to the heritage attraction Royal Dockyards in Portsmouth, UK. I work for a design firm called Forrec and live in Toronto, Canada. Kristen and I have two beautiful daughters, Eloise (3.5) and Cosima (9).” Laura Ottaviano Copic writes, “I traveled to Italy last June with my sister and mother to celebrate our respective 50th, 40th, and 80th birthdays. We hiked, ate, and wine-toured our way through the beautiful, medieval hill towns of Tuscany; and then ended our trip in Florence. I had been reading Dan Brown’s latest book, Inferno (which features some interesting art and history of Florence), when I happened to run into the author himself on our last day at a rooftop bar along the Arno. The perfect end to the perfect trip. Florence has changed quite a bit since I visited in 1984 with Ruth Lohmann Davis and Denah Lohmann Toupin during our Middlebury semester in France. While visiting my aunt and uncle in Italy during spring break, the blond, Californian Lohmann twins turned quite a few Italian heads. Now they’re the New Englanders and I’m the blond Californian—only at 50, I’m not exactly turning heads ;).” Laura, Ruth, and I beg to differ with you. You are STILL turning heads! • On the domestic front, we heard from Don Hall: “This past summer my family of four did a great road trip, driving from Seattle to Montana and Wyoming. The highlights of the trip included whitewater rafting down the Snake River and hiking in Grand Teton National Park. We also had the chance to spend meaningful time with my mom and dad in Livingston, Mont., a few weeks before my dad passed away at age 86.” Don, we’re sorry for your loss. We have all reached that point in our lives when we are starting to say goodbye to people, including our parents, and it’s hard. • We also heard from Mary Rolph Lamontagne, who is now a published author. She writes, “My book Eats: Enjoy All the Seconds was published in June. My cookbook is all about reducing waste in the kitchen by repurposing rather than throwing out leftovers. The book is color coded and then divided into fruits and vegetables though it is not only for vegetarians. I created this book after spending the past few years training chefs in Southern African bush camps. I’ve been traveling through the Northeast U.S., Toronto, and Montreal doing signings and TV and radio interviews.” In September she visited Boston, where she met with Midd alums Randy Mahoney ’83 and Andrew Friendly ’91 at a book-signing event. She then headed down to NYC to visit Maura Riccobene Bulkeley for her birthday. Mary also participated in a TV segment for Inside Edition before continuing on to Delaware, where she did a Q & A with Governor Jack Markell’s wife, Carla. Check out more about Mary on page 82. • On a very sad note, Jennifer Croland Luethke died in January 2013. She lived in Haworth, N.J., and is survived by husband Michael and her four sons (Andrew, Benjamin, Michael, and William). Our hearts go out to her family and friends. • Please keep us posted about your lives, all. We love to hear from you! You can also find us on Facebook.

---

Jeffrey Berkman has published a book on due diligence in business transactions involving closely held businesses. Due Diligence and the Business Transaction: Getting a Deal Done (Jeffrey W. Berkman, Apress 2013) is a practical guide for anyone buying or selling a privately held business or entering into a major agreement with another company or business partner. • We are pleased to announce that Ann Albernn Olmsted has joined our correspondent team. Thanks, Ann! Her e-mail is ann.olmsted64@gmail.com.

---

Paolo Bonetti writes, “After nine years in the organic wine business in Boulder, Colo., I have joined the executive team at Madhava Natural Sweeteners. This is a great opportunity to join a fast-growing company and a booming natural product category. I’m still in Boulder and happily married to Tiphaine with three kids, 12, 9, and 6.” Diana Stuart Sinton continues to expand her work in the geographic information systems (GIS) world by becoming the new executive director of the University Consortium for Geographic Information Science. This nonprofit organization serves to advance the research and education agendas of its member institutions in higher education. • Michael Loumbury writes, “All is great for me in Canada. I’m an associate dean for research at the Univ. of Alberta. I’m married to Kristin Coviello Loumbury ’94 and we’re enjoying two wonderful kids—Valerie (8) and Corey (6). I’m most proud of coaching my boy’s under-6 soccer team to an undefeated season last spring.”

---

86

We’d love to hear from you! Send us news! --Class Correspondents: Tom Funk (tomfunk@gmail.com); Elizabeth Ryan O’Brien (obrien@bigzaboop.com).

---

87

88
REUNION CLASS

Langdon Cook has published a new book titled The Mushroom Hunters: On the Trail of an Underground America. Realizing how important wild mushrooms are in the four-star restaurant world, he investigated the methods by which the mushrooms are collected in the wilderness. And as Bill McKibben comments, "If you've never thought of using the words 'mushroom' and 'adventure' in the same sentence, this gripping book will force you to reconsider!"

—Class Correspondent: John Matterperl (john@baldyconsulting.com).

Parker Vaughey lives in Princeton, N.J., with his wife Lynn, twin girls Ryan and Elliot (9) and son Aidan (12). He works for Hudson's Bay Company, which ironically just acquired Saks, Inc.—Parker's first employer out of Middlebury. He occasionally runs into Victoria Vitrano Hamilton in town. • Jill Danielli lives in Atlanta and works as a senior customer marketing manager in the national foodservice and on-premise group at Coca-Cola. In her spare time, she's involved in the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society's Team in Training program as a coach for marathon and half-marathon teams and chairman of the Corporate Team Committee. She's completed 21 half marathons and competed in her first Half Ironman triathlon in the fall. • Jeff Bograd lives in Hopkinton, Mass., with wife Karen (Thayer) and kids Nick (17), Emma (14), and Harrison (9). He has worked for New York Life Retirement Plan Services since two weeks after our graduation and now manages the company's retirement consulting practice. Karen worked at New York Life, as well, for 17 years but now is focused on the kids and volunteering. • Denny Taylor is a managing consultant in the NYC office of YSC, a London-based firm of business psychologists, where he does executive coaching, development, and team effectiveness. He moved with wife Alex and two boys last year to Darien, Conn., after several decades of living in Brooklyn and NYC. • Paul and Amy Carnola Hauf live in Richmond, Va., with son William (10) and daughter Anna (7). Paul is an institutional fixed-income broker with Carolina Capital Markets and Amy is the director of community impact and volunteer mobilization for the United Way of Chittenden County. William's hockey team was state champions last year under Paul's fine mentoring. • Khalid Quadir is the CEO and founding partner of Brummer & Partners (Bangladesh), which manages the Bangladesh-focused Frontier Fund, a private equity fund. Following graduation, Khalid worked for several Wall Street firms, including CIBC Capital, and was also a Fellow at Stanford Business School. While working in the U.S., he helped his older brother, Iqbal Quadir, to set up Grameenphone, the first mobile telecom company in Bangladesh, in partnership with Grameen Bank and Telenor of Norway. Today, it is the largest mobile operator in the country with over 150 million subscribers.

Winter 2014  81
MARY ROLPH LAMONTAGNE was training chefs in a bush camp in Botswana when she had her “light bulb” moment. The camp was low on provisions, and old, uneaten leftovers were building up in the refrigerator. Shipping garbage out was expensive, and food was delivered only once a week. Not only that, but monkeys and hyenas intruded camps and wreaked havoc with supplies. She needed to find a way to create delicious dishes with what she had and not waste food. She began to experiment with recipes and methods for using leftovers. Extra carrots from a main dish of braised maple ginger carrots could be mashed to make a carrot cake, carrot fritters, or carrot hummus. Too many sweet potatoes from dinner could be made into sweet potato buttermilk waffles. Her creativity with leftovers has been chronicled in her recipe book EATS: Enjoy All the Seconds, which shows how to convert the edible fruits and vegetables often tossed into the garbage into healthy meals. Mary has become an ardent sustainable-food and composting advocate as a result.

Her career path has gone from being an art major at Middlebury, to training as a chef in Paris, to owning an event-planning company in Montreal. Moving to South Africa in 2005 with her family, she became a food consultant for hotels and began her work in the bush camps. Her mission has been to help in job creation, skills training, and social development in the hospitality industry. But mainly she'd like to inspire people to become as passionate about sustaining and stretching their food supply as she is.
my husband, Doug, and our family, Lexie (16), Jillian (13), and Lindsay (9). Kiteboarding, sailing, and wakeboarding are limited to the warmer months! • Karen Hamad writes, "We had an amazing summer adventure in Alaska, spending time at two unique lodges, having up-close experiences with all kinds of wildlife from whales to grizzlies. There was hell-raising and fishing with a championship Idritarod dog team—just incredible! • Jeremy Braddock has coedited a book of essays titled Paris, Capital of the Black Atlantic: Literature, Modernity, and Diaspora. The essays explore the circulation of ideas, texts, and objects to which travels made passing of classmate Sean Brady on August 15. Our deepest condolences go to his friends and family.

Aiden is four. They live in Sudbury, Mass., and he conducts and production manager for athenahealth in Gordon lives in San Francisco with wife Shelley and sons Stark (5) and Cannon (3). He notes, "It's been a whirlwind. In addition to the usual parenting duties, I'm a communicator with 20 years of experience leading and directing large organizations available!" • Kingman Gordon lives in San Francisco with wife Shelley and sons Stark (3) and Cannon (3). He notes, "It's been a whirlwind. In addition to the usual parenting duties, I'm a communicator with 20 years of experience leading and directing large organizations available!" • Kingman Gordon lives in San Francisco with wife Shelley and sons Stark (3) and Cannon (3). He notes, "It's been a whirlwind. In addition to the usual parenting duties, I'm a communicator with 20 years of experience leading and directing large organizations available!"

where she lives for most of the year. After graduating from business school, she worked in finance. She and husband Alex spend most of their time in Vermont, while at times she "must go back to Manhattan to get my sushi and Chinese food fix." Pat enjoys life in her new house in Wilmington, from which she manages an online business and invites her nieces and nephews to come and learn to ski. • Fiona McDonald Rose lives in Ringwood, N.J., with her husband and two daughters (16 and 7). She writes, "I have been swimming a lot at our lake and had a pretty cool accomplishment of swimming the lake (about 3/4 of a mile) in a little over a half an hour. Not a record breaking time but a personal achievement for me!" Fiona has been very involved with the schools in her town, both with the PTO and other volunteer associations. She recently became a trustee on the town's educational foundation, reviewing local educators' grant proposals and awarding funds. She's excited to be a part of something that directly benefits local children. • Rob Luce lives in Johannesburg, South Africa, with wife Mary and children Georgia (12) and Oliver (9). He is a music producer and visual effects artist and play drums in two bands: Redhead (blues) and Stray Natives (alt. rock). • Tom Armbrecht writes, "I'm still a professor of French literature at the Univ. of Paris, whether literally or figuratively, by black writing of ideas, texts, and objects to which travels made Anchorage with son Springer (6). Jen works as a professional artist, painting murals and making large-scale relief wood carvings. Ian has his own GIS programming business and paragliders and love company! • Chip Muir is going through a big transition, retiring from the Navy after 21 years! He writes, "I've been in Newport, R.I., for three years working at the Naval War College, designing, conducting, and analyzing war games for the Navy. This was a great last tour, a lot of fun and hard work. We've created games about the Arctic, the Panama Canal expansion, explored new concepts in Naval strategy, and played with nuclear deterrent issues. I'll miss the flying and the camaraderie of the Navy but it's time to grow up and get a real job. If anyone in the Greater Philadelphia area is hiring, there's a gifted Chris recently accepted a new position teaching multimedia at High Tech High in San Diego, a charter school leading the way in project-based learning. Chris is also excited to be starting a theater program there, incorporating mixed media and new play development. • In Santa Monica, Calif., Chris and Inger Lund '05 Carter, with daughter Berit and dog Sarka, welcomed son Killian in April. They enjoyed weekly breakfasts with Chapin Hemphill '93 until his recent move to San Jose, and Jon Johnstone and his girlfriend helpfully brought Thai takeout to the new parents. • Porter Fox's first book, Deep: The Story of Skiing and the Future of Snow, has come out. It's essentially a book about climate change and the end of winter as we know it, in the next 75 years. Bill McKibben was a great help in creating the book. • Heather Dorf Rawlings reports she's been skiing (but has been passed in ability by her children) and playing hockey (but not as well as her older son)—basically being humbled by the next generation on a daily basis and loving it. • Kipp Sutton recently moved to Bangkok with his wife and two little ones. They'll be there for four years—a nice long posting in a career of country hopping for the government. He looks forward to Midd reunions in Thailand (if such a thing ever happens) and maybe timing will work for a Vermont visit one of these years. • Peter Savodnik was on campus in October to give a talk as part of the Meet the Press series. He came to speak about Stateless Media and the direction journalism is heading. Check out the story on middmag.com called "Print Journalism in the Age of Twitter." • Class Correspondents: Mary Strife Cairns (mcairns@middlebury.edu); Gene Swift (generuiff@gmail.com).

With less than 18 months until we celebrate our 20th reunion, we hope June 2015 is on everyone’s calendar so that we can catch up in person and enjoy each other’s stories. • Roberta Stewart writes, “Husband Seth Kaufman and I welcomed baby boy Ajax on December 27, 2012. He joined big sister Helene (4). We were thrilled to get visits at our home in D.C. from honorary aunties Janine Hetherington and Rebecca Plona, who made the trip from New England for some quality baby holding in Ajax’s first weeks in the world. My Midd friends are still my best friends!” • Anna Nolin catches us up on all that has been going on in her life: “I’m finishing my doctorate at Boston College in educational leadership and should finish in May! My dissertation is on how superintendents implement 1:1 laptop programs and gain acceptance for them in their local communities and with varied constituencies. I just accepted a new job as the assistant superintendent for teaching, learning, and innovation for the Natick (Mass.) Public Schools. I have been a principal there for the past 10 years and am honored to serve the community in this new role. I also teach as adjunct professor at Educator Leadership Institute at Endicott College and serve as a guest lecturer at the Commonwealth Leadership Academy, both principal training programs. I have recently participated in a two-year changeover of our secondary schools to become 1:1 laptop classrooms and have been experimenting with virtual and blended learning environments to personalize learning for Natick students. I love my job and the students and families I serve. This is what it’s like when dreams come true. I couldn’t do any of it without my caring and supportive husband, Ben Halpern ’93, and our two kids, Ethan (10) and Ava (7), or the friendship of our son’s godparents, John and Robert Hottre—cocreated, cowritten, and costarring—will present their mom’s odd schedule and sporadic absences.” • Laura Whiteman writes, “It takes a village to be working parents and raise kids these days—and we’re grateful for their support and friendship!” • Dave Kulis was recently announced as the new VP of marketing at Okemo Mountain Resort. After years in the ski industry from Vermont to Pennsylvania to Idaho, Dave returns to the site of his marriage proposal to wife Randi. The two now have three children and Dave is excited to be back in Vermont working with a great team. • Caroline Fennessy Campion has co-authored Keepers: Two Home Cooks Share Their Tried and True Weeknight Recipes and the Secrets to Happiness in the Kitchen. Answering that eternal question, “What are you making for dinner tonight,” the book is “filled with best-of-her-kind, brag-worthy, crowd-pleasing, fool-proof and reliable recipes.” Caroline is a contributing editor at Glamour magazine and creator of the blog www.devilandegg.com. • Keep your news flowing through e-mail, as we all enjoy keeping up via class notes. See you in June 2015.

Welcome to Miguel Vides, who has agreed to be a class correspondent for our class. And thank you to Amanda Gordon Fletcher for all her years gathering news for ‘96! Miguel’s latest news is that his second daughter, Katalina, was born on March 2. • Tiffany Conroy Moore sent word that she has published a book, Kositinev’s Shakespeare Films: Russian Political Protest in Hamlet and King Lear. She lives in Portsmouth, N.H., with her husband and three pet rats and teaches English, Shakespeare, writing, public speaking, and drama among other subjects. • Rachel Shapiro and Marliisa Simonson returned to campus for Homecoming and ALC this past fall and reconnected with friends from various classes, including Janine Hetherington ’95 and Bob Luce ’59, and watched Middlebury beat Trinity at football. • Shamil Shipchandler has had a busy year as a federal prosecutor. In mid-2013, as a deputy criminal chief in the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the Eastern District of Texas, he received a Dept. of Justice Director’s Award for his prosecution of 40 defendants in a wide-ranging mortgage fraud scheme. More recently, he handled the resolution of the Infosys case, which resulted in a $35 million payment by Infosys to the federal government to resolve allegations of systemic visa fraud, a punishment that is the highest in U.S. history for immigration violations. Shamil supervises the office in Plano, Texas, and prosecutes white-collar criminal cases. • Jennifer Jay Bass writes, “I’m working as a licensed and certified professional midwife in the Greater Phoenix, Ariz., area. My four kids have become accustomed to their mom’s odd schedule and sporadic absences.” • Tonya Ezra writes, “Over the summer I went to New York and saw Nick Taranko ’95 and Rev. Harold Wheat ’95, as well as Wayne Seifried ’97. We had a blast catching up and walking into Harold’s church unannounced in order to surprise him! In October I marked my one-year anniversary of ordination as a pastor in the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, as well as my one-year anniversary of serving at Hope Lutheran Church in Powell, Wyo. I’ve done 80 miles east of Yellowstone, so if you find yourself in the area, please stop by!” • Laura Thomas writes, “My husband, Andy Dosmann, and I just moved to San Francisco! I’m still working for the National Geographic Channel and he is teaching at Stanford Univ. We’d love to know who else is in the Bay Area!” • Gregory Lewicki sent word that daughter Eva Lampke-Lewicki was born on October 17. • Margaret Seiche has been living with her family in Beijing for the past eight years. She works part-time on economic research at Market News International as well as volunteering as the treasurer for the PTA at Dulwich College Beijing. During summer vacations, she has visited with Yim Lee, Alexis Holtzman, and Tonya Ezra in NYC and Mona Zhao in New Jersey. • Dan O’Brien and Jessica St. Clair ’98 welcomed their first child, Isobel Kelly O’Brien, on October 1. In less exciting news, Dan’s play The Body of an American was awarded the PEN USA drama prize in literature and is having its European premiere this January at London’s Gate Theatre. His debut poetry collection, War Reporter, won the UK’s prestigious Aldeburgh Prize. And Jessica’s new comedy, Playing House—co-created, cowritten, and costarring—will premiere on USA Network in March. • Class Correspondents: Megan Shottuck (meganbsbattuck@gmail.com); Miguel Vides (avidesi@hotmail.com).

Jason Tandon has published a new book of poetry, Quality of Life, which is his third collection. His poetry and reviews have appeared in a number of literary journals both in print and online. He teaches in the College of Arts and Sciences Writing Program at Boston Univ. • Congratulations to Pete Johnson, who was named Vermont Small Business Person of the Year last June for his savvy and persistence in overcoming adversity after his Pete’s Greens’ barn burned. • Derek and Amy Starr Redwine recently relocated to Cleveland Heights, Ohio, where Derek was called as head of staff of Fairmont Presbyterian Church. Amy left her role as associate pastor of discipleship at Westminster Presbyterian Church in Akron, Ohio, for the move and is searching for a new ministry position. In the meantime, she is at home with their three children, Sarah (8), Quinn (6), and George (2). • Heather Barrett Sanborn is a co-owner of Rising Tide Brewery, a small family-owned brewery in Portland, Maine. They’ve been selling in Maine and Massachusetts and last year began selling in Vermont. Started in 2010 with a one-barrel system, they now have a 15-barrel brewhouse. • Class Correspondents: Jennifer Gelb Carbee (jrgelb@yahoo.com); Catherine Mitchell Wieman (catherinewieman95@hotmail.com).

Kevan ’97 and Katie Whittlesey Comstock are thrilled to announce that they welcomed their baby GIRL, Avery Cronwall Comstock, on November 1. Cronwall is Katie’s mom’s maiden name and gives a shout out to the Swedish side of the family Spencer and Will are Avery’s proud big brothers. • Karu Kosuma, who was serving as the internation vice provost at UPenn, was named associate vice provost for student affairs. He serves as the vice provost’s chief deputy in all matters involving undergraduate, graduate, and professional student affairs, activities, and programming. • Class Correspondents: Katie Whittlesey Comstock (katie.comstock@ann.jll.com); Nate Johnson (natejohn95@gmail.com).

— Class Correspondents: Emily Aikenhead Hannon (hannon.emily@gmail.com); JP Watson (jpwatson@heritagehawks.org).
provider payment reform. Dave also continues to invest in real estate and advise real estate investment clients as a real estate agent for Keller Williams. • Ben Newman writes, "I opened a new restaurant in late July. The Barreloin in Marblehead, Mass., serves classic American pub food, as well as many craft beers (including Otter Creek, of course). I'm still living in Boston with wife Kirsten and sons Graeme (2.5) and Rhys (9 mos.)." • Ashley Waddell writes, "We survived the Great Colorado Floods of 2013; no damage to our house or property but there was terrible destruction all around, including washed-out roads that likely won't be rebuilt for months, and people stranded in mountain towns that became 'islands' accessible only by helicopter. Mark your calendars, friends: our 15-year reunion is June 6–8, and we will be there!" • Anita Chávez-Berry reports, "My husband and I are now teaching in Nagoya, Japan. We moved here last month from Chengdu, China. Visitors welcome!" • Hedda Berntsen writes, "I'm training like a Panther for the Sochi Olympics. I tried a few weeks in an office last June, but soon realized being a professional athlete is the best." • Ted Adler reports that both Jon Abodeely and Jason Wynn had babies last summer. Jason adds that his son Alden Dean Wynn was born on July 17. As for Ted, he writes, "I'm back in Vermont after three years going between Burlington and Boston. Abigail completed her residency and is now an attending pediatric hospitalist at Fletcher Allen. We just bought a house on Cliff Street in Burlington. My commute to Union Street Media went from 180 steps at my old place on Howard Street to a full three blocks." • This fall Scott Wiercinski had his first season as the head coach of the Bowdoin men's soccer team. In September they played Middlebury and ended up with a 1–1 tie after two overtime periods. • Class Correspondents: Melissa Pruessing Miraski (mpruessing@yahoo.com); Peter Steinberg (captfion09@gmail.com).

Paul and Lena Watts Flannery are thrilled to announce the arrival of son Kieran James Flannery on September 16. They're settling into life as a family of three in Somerville, Mass. • Jessica Christian married Josh Weinger (Brandeis '00) on August 17 in Sharon, Mass. Congratulations! • Blake Rutherford and wife Jessica Dean moved in September to Philadelphia. Blake is continuing his work at the McLarty Companies, while Jessica has taken on a new position as a weekday evening news anchor at the CBS News affiliate in Philadelphia. • Junghong Li sent word that her new book, Tiger Woman on Wall Street, has been published. She writes, "I position the book as a showcase of how to conduct meticulous, exhaustive, investigative due diligence on companies and on the economy, techniques, and processes any serious investors need to be equipped with, especially when it comes to investing in China, an emerging market where corporate governance is weak and the protection of the minority shareholders' interests is extremely poor. The book is unique in that it's based on personal experience and it's rich in anecdotes and stories. It traces back to the '80s in China when I grew up, which provides a rich backdrop of China's (too) fast economic transformation." One of her dedications is to the College "for teaching me that life is an art, not a science." • Class Correspondents: David Babington (davidbabington@gmail.com); Lindsay Simpson (simpsonlindsay@yahoo.com).

Keith Case '05 sent word that he and Ethan Lacy, who were in the same MIT architecture class (M.Arch 2010), were both recently licensed. • Over the summer of 2013, Lorinc Redei defended his PhD dissertation in international relations at Central European Univ. He is a lecturer at the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs at the Univ. of Texas at Austin, teaching EU politics and transatlantic relations. He now uses the words "howdy" and "y'all" un-ironically, and is considering the cowboy-boots-with-tailored-suit look. Look him up if you're coming to town! • James Ong, Emily Sharkey, and big brother Miles are happy to announce the birth of Simon, born August 4. • Becky Ruby Swansburg was chosen for the inaugural class of the Frank Leadership Institute, a program of the national Jewish Council for Public Affairs aimed at developing Jewish leaders for interfaith, community, and public relations. The program kicked off with a trip to Poland and Israel in the fall, where the group met with government leaders and community organizations. Becky is incredibly excited about this opportunity. • Jean Burr and John Colianni welcomed their second baby in December 2012, a boy named Matthew, who joined their older son, Peter. They also moved their brood out of Central New York and back to Portland, Maine, last May. John took a new job with Martin's Point Health Care, and they have all been loving every minute of life on the coast. • Garrett Dodge continues to work on his start-up, a rapidly growing music company with a smart-phone app called Rockbot, while Kristen (Lyall) works in autism research at UC Davis. They had a summer get-together with a bunch of Midd Kids in NYC—Miranda Hillyard, Tom Santoro, and Tom Keon—and they anticipated a visit from Dan McNamara in California in late September. • Tom Santoro writes, "In October I moved to Nairobi, Kenya, to open a new office with the Public International Law and Policy Group, a global pro-bono law firm. I'm leading a two-year, State Dept.-funded project to offering support and training for domestic accountability mechanisms and strategic litigation initiatives in Kenya. Wife Andrea joined me in the beginning of November." • Mariah McKechnie-Fadzielewicz writes, "I'm excited to announce the opening of a new location for our event-design business. We call it the Vault, because the space actually contains a historic vault from the 1939 World's Fair in NYC. Business is booming and we successfully delivered over 60 gorgeous events in Minnesota this summer!" • Sharon Wilson Purdy and husband Michael welcomed daughter Tirzah Mae on August 1. Elijah (4) and Jacob (2) are very loving and "hands-on" big brothers. • Kelsey Dohb and Trevor Henry were married on April 6, 2013. They were fortunate to have many Middley friends in attendance: Abbey Haber and Chris Lindstrom '99, Mike Kerkorian, Elizabeth Doyle Covioe, and Jessica Bean. Kelsey and Trevor live in Boston, Mass. • Vasia Markides has a very exciting project going on: "It has to do with a movement in Cyprus to turn an occupied ghost city into a model eco-city—the first of its kind, ever! We're making a documentary about this movement, which we started ourselves, and are trying to raise funds for it. We have been getting loads of press since we launched, with the BBC about to do a story on us this week." She was using Kickstarter as part of her fund-raising. • Ellen Guettler and husband Ben Pofahl welcomed their first child, Odin Edward Guettler Pofahl, on August 31. • Class Correspondents: Leslie Fox Arnould (leslicarnould@gmail.com); Michael Hartt (barrt@alumni.middlebury.edu).
Matt and Heather Beal LaRocca picking apples at Shelburne Orchards.
—Class Correspondents: Anne Alfano (anne.alfano@gmail.com); Stephen Messinger (s.messinger@gmail.com).

The Class of 2003 thanks Megan Dodge for more than 10 years of dutiful service as class correspondent. She now is delighted to pass the torch to Janine Knight-Grofe and Nathan Davis, who are looking forward to keeping in touch with their fellow alumni. Janine is on a yearlong maternity leave with her still-pretty-new baby, Elijah, and Jakob (9). Her days consist of everything kid-related, including teaching Reggae Mamas, a postnatal dance fitness class. While it feels like another life at this point, Janine will soon return to her post as research manager at the Canadian Bureau for International Education, Canada’s top national education organization dedicated exclusively to international education. (She helped write that tag line, so likes to use it?) Nathan spent six years as a fundraiser for New York’s Whitney Museum of American Art and for the Apollo Theater before heading to law school. He now lives in Santa Monica with a boyfriend and a Labradoodle, working for the firm of Liner LLP in commercial and entertainment litigation, and he’s charitably involved with California Lawyers for the Arts. What are you up to Class of ’03? Contact us at the e-mails below.

In other 2003 news, Shahan Mufli has published The Faithful Scribe: A Story of Islam, Pakistan, Family, and War. In the book he writes about his family history, which he can trace back 1,400 years to the inner circle of the prophet Muhammad, and through his personal history, he tells the larger story of the history of Pakistan.

—Class Correspondents: Nathan Davis (davis.nm@gmail.com); Janine Knight-Grofe (j.knightgrofe@gmail.com).

Reunion Class

Devin Green, Jill Snider, Eric Ambrette, Vicky Baptiste, and Athena Fischer-Rodney returned to campus in October for Homecoming and the Alumni Leadership Conference to get a jump-start on planning the 10th reunion. • John Dorazio got married to Tara Morley (BC ’04) on October 5. • Ashley McBride Turner and husband Guy welcomed Winter Downey Turner into the world on Saturday, October 26. Winter’s older sister Skye is very happy to have a baby brother to play with!

—Class Correspondents: Julia Herwood Breeden (julia.breeden@gmail.com); Athena Fischer-Rodney (princess1328@yahoo.com).

Last November Andy Rossmeissl and Robbie Adler, along with Jay ’06 and Emily Adler Boren ’07, spent 21 days rafting down the Colorado River, from the beginning of the Grand Canyon to the end. Andy sent a photo (see page 74) and he writes, “Somebody at the alumni office was kind enough to loan me a flag, which spent three weeks awash in sand at the bottom of my dry bag except for when I would haul it out for group pictures. This particular shot is at Phantom Ranch, about halfway down the river, which is essentially the only sign of civilization you see during the trip.” • Keith Case, who earned his master’s in architecture from MIT in 2010, was recently licensed. • Zahra Valimahomed Mehta writes, “At the end of last year my husband Anand and I celebrated the arrival of our son, Bodhi Anand Mehta. Our little Panther was born on November 16, 2012.” • Christina Tolbert graduated from Ross University School of Medicine and is now a resident physician at the Medical University of South Carolina. She visited with Tina Velez in November for Tina’s birthday and in preparation for Tina’s summer wedding. Tina is in her ninth year of teaching elementary school in NYC. Christina was also a part of the wedding party for Erin Amico’s wedding in the Amalfi Coast, Italy. • Dena Simmons is spending a year at Phillips Exeter Academy, as one of their first dissertation-year fellows. She’s writing her dissertation on teacher preparedness to address bullying in the middle school context. In April 2013 she gave a second TEDx talk titled, “It’s 10 p.m. Do you know where your children are?” She is also at Middlebury this January, teaching a J-term course called Health Disparities in the U.S. • Daniel Hughes recently moved from the world of corporate litigation to the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office, prosecuting felony drug trafficking cases as a special narcotics prosecutor. He moved to Brooklyn with his wonderful wife, Melissa, and their rambunctious puppy, Xerxes. In the last few years, he is very happy to have attended the weddings of his fellow Panthers: Sarah Bdzego Welch, Heather Harris Mancini, Derek Singer, Aaron Mensh, Brent Levy, Sara Rogers Meyerson, and (to each other) Joey Kohn and Katie Harrison. • Andrew Jacobi is opening a sandwich shop, called Untamed, serves braised meat sandwiches with sustainable ingredients. He looks forward to serving Midd Kids a sandwich! Stop by and say hi! • He says he will be there day and night.

—Class Correspondents: Martha Dutton (martha.dutton@gmail.com); Dena Simmons (dena.simmons@gmail.com).

We would be remiss not to tip our caps to Peter Hall, who has created a new kind of inflatable stand-up paddleboard (SUP) at his company Hala Gear, based out of Steamboat Springs, Colo. • Please raise a glass of bubbly to Matt Corrente, who left Pistou to become the executive chef at Bluebird Tavern in Burlington, Vt. • And of course, wedding season carried over into the fall: Travis Meyer and Celia Cohen got married in September in beautiful rural Virginia, with a lot of ’06ers annihilating the dance floor, including a sweaty Jon Sisto and a calm and collected JP Coviello. Others in attendance included Kristen Herzog, Julia Cardozo, Allison Smith, Anna Spiegel, Emily Enos, Bev Johnston, Alison Perencevich, and Chip Campbell. • Side note, Emily Enos took a cross-country drive from Boston to San Francisco this past fall prior to starting nursing school. • Another Middlebury couple recently married was Alex Nadas and Haley Gilbert ’07 in beautiful Woodstock, Vt. • Josh White, David Freedman and Zach Snyder headlined the groomsmen, and many more Middlebury classmates were in attendance.

Jamie Fey also had a fantastic quintessential Maine wedding in Portland, complete with a lobster and clam bake the night before, then a beautiful outdoor ceremony followed by dinner and dancing (and homemade Whoopie pies). Numerous friends from Middlebury joined the celebration. • In August Clark Smith and Amy McCowan ’08 tied the knot after meeting at Middlebury fall semester 2004. They had a taco truck and bonfire on the beach to kick off the celebration, then the ceremony and reception at stunning Holman Ranch in Carmel, Calif. • Midd friends flew in to join from as far away as China! Among Clark’s wedding party were Darryl Etter, Calvin Garner, and Peter Wolkowski. Clark and Amy live in San Francisco.

Elise Burditt received an MBA in June 2013 from the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University. She’s now living in NYC, working as an associate brand manager for OREO at Mondelez International. • Katie Clagett is now an admissions and financial aid officer at Harvard University. Last May, Mike and Courtney Swanda Philibin ran the Vermont City Marathon in Burlington together. Courtney will also be running the 2014 Boston Marathon as a member of Team in Training to fund-raise for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. • Courtney and Mike went to California in the summer and spent an amazing week with Jon Larson and Jamie Wong in San Francisco. They also coincidentally ran into Josh and Fran Filippelli Caruso in Big Sur while they were camping and traveling up the coast!

Julie Gross Williams reports that a great time was had by all at Sarah Radosevich’s wedding in Minnesota in May. Other Midd guests included Alexandra Polesim, Anna Marks, and Grace Armstrong. • Ben Bruno and wife Lauren are living the dream and bought a house in Middlebury. They also got a dog, a chocolate Labradoodle named Tisbury. They were looking forward to this January, when Andy Hale and Russ Johanson were visiting winter term professors for the second time, teaching a course titled Infectious Disease: Historical Epidemics, Current Dilemmas, and Emerging Problems. • Midd alums traveled far and wide to execute a surprise birthday party in honor of Calvin Garner’s 50th and Grace Kronenberg Coriell’s 29th. Trekking from California, Boston, Vermont, upstate New York, Denver, and the Upper West Side, Midd friends treated Calvin to a ferry ride up the Hudson River to Bear Mountain Oktoberfest.
Beers and brats were had by all, namely Josh Feldman, Dave Coriell, Eric Merkelson, Clark and Amy McCowan ’08 Smith, Sam Temes ’07, Laura Silverman ’07, Jessica Hallett, Jess Van Wagenen O’Rielly, Lelia Yerxa, Elise Burditt, Lauren Van Wagenen ’08, Kelly Boyle, Katie Claggett, Caryn LoCastro ’07, Mike Ratpojanakul, Fran and Josh Carson, and Anna Chavis ’08. • Jess Murray graduated from Northwestern’s JD-MBA program and has moved back to NYC to work at Kirkland & Ellis. She also celebrated Caitlin Brome’s wedding in East Burke, VT, in October. Molly Cable, Mike and Courtney Philbin, Erika Gold Chasen, Rob and Camden Burton Hillas, and Laurie Griffin were all there. • Finally, in regards to Tyler Bak, it’s been an honor to entertain all of you these past few issues with updates about our classmate. But it’s time for us to move on down the road, spend less time trying to fit an update in from our blue-eyed hero of lower Manhattan, and spend more time hearing from the rest of you. So if you have not seen your name in print in awhile, please let us know what you’ve been up to.
—Class Correspondents: Alex Casnocha (alexander.casnocha@gmail.com); Jack Donaldson (jack.c.donaldson@gmail.com); Jess Van Wagenen O’Rielly (jesorielly@gmail.com).
Hilary Johnson ’02 and Andrew Gay ’00 were married at Mead Chapel September 15, 2012, on a beautiful fall day, and the reception was held at the bride’s parents’ home in neighboring Cornwall. Many Middlebury friends and family joined the couple for the celebration: Bill Beaney (coach), Judy Beaney, Emily Lord ’03, Sarah Brooks Minardi ’02, Megan Sands ’02, the newlyweds, Kyle Wheale MacDougall ’02, Emily Hatch ’02, Kirsten Schiller ’02, Stella Harman ’02, Sydney Johnston McConathy ’02, Shari Galligan Johnson ’68, Chad McConathy ’04, (second row) Dwight Dunning ’67, Judith Enright Dunning ’66, Zoe Owens ’02, Magna Leffler Dodge ’68, David Dodge ’69, Dana Curtis Keep ’84, Helena Johnson, MA German ’03, Dick Crumb ’69, Ann Einmiedler Crumb ’71, Brooke Beaney ’00, Chris Wenger ’00, Katherine Barr Hollingsworth ’00, Will Parker ’00, Jordan Gutweiler ’00, Bobby Gillespie ’00, Justin Klein ’00, Brad Gay ’98, Andrew Sharp ’00, and Bill Johnson ’69. At St. Patrick’s Cathedral in New York City, Meghan Cannella ’02 and Robert Carroll Jr. were married on September 15, 2012. Middlebury family and friends helped the couple celebrate: (all ’02 unless noted) Lisa Bennett Prange, Anna Martin Denton, Patricia Shea, Bridget Dungan, the newlyweds, Allison Rago Mason, Allison Branch Meade, Katelyn Cannella ’06, Meghan Dwyer Lehr, Kate Clark Aitken, (second row) Brian Ferry, Melissa Stewart Bilodeau ’99, Bethany Bilodeau ’97, and Mike Gentle ’08. Friends from the Class of 2001 gathered at Sel de la Terre restaurant in Boston to celebrate Leslie Fox Arnold’s baby shower last year: Kate Griffiths Wilk, Kristen Sylva Capodilupo, Sarah Theall Lenke, Leslie, Becky Ruby Swansburg, and Kelsey Doub.

Rachel Lincoln ’08 married Jan Grindrod on September 15, 2012, in Hingham, Mass. Middlebury alumni in attendance were Chris Vandergrift ’11, Sam Dembicer ’11, bridesmaid Hannah Lincoln ’10, Ben Schiffer ’10 as guest and DJ, Matt Groebe ’08, Kyle Howard ’10, H. Kay Merriman ’10, the newlyweds, Rachel Strong ’08, Matt Friend ’07, Emily Sharkey ’01, and James Ong ’01. Missing from photo: bridesmaid Christiana Martenson ’08. Becky Belcher ’01 married Peter Feen at the Nantucket Yacht Club on September 15, 2012. Middlebury alumni in attendance included (all ’01 unless noted) Tripp Donelan ’02, Jocelyn Hunter Hornblower, Alexandra Fay Baker, the newlyweds, Lucy Chapin ’06, (second row) Brian Phinney ’05, Dana Chapin Anselmi ’02, Donald Anselmi ’04, Randy Wilson Hall, Betsy Wheeler, Ted Parker ’08, Heather Harken Parker ’08, Jane Belcher Phinney ’73, George Phinney ’68, and Caitlin Toombs ’05.

H. Kay Merriman and Kyle Howard still love life in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge. Kyle works as a postproduction freelancer and H. Kay has recently transitioned into a school operations role for the Partnership for Inner-City Education. • Alice Ford returned from the Dominican Republic to spend the summer with her family in Maine. She now lives in NYC, teaching at the Bronx Community Charter School, and she’s excited to be back in touch with so many Midd Kids! • After spending two years in NYC, Carolyn Birskey decided to give the lovely city of Boston a try. She recently moved to Beacon Hill with Sarah DeCamp ’12 and loves exploring the city and meeting up with Midd Kids in the area, including Hannah Burnett, who is now working as an admissions counselor for Northeastern Univ. • These notes were collected after a Labor Day weekend on Cape Cod with Emmy Burleigh, Connor Burleigh, Doug Grunseich, Molly Brister, Raina Crawford, Alice Ford, Kyle Howard, H. Kay Merriman, Hannah Burnett, Carolyn Birskey, Ben Zorach, Jack Kramer, Robbie Zabel ’11, and several other Midd Kids from the classes of 2011 and beyond! It was a wonderful, lobster-filled reunion! • The Class of 2010 is short on class updates! We would REALLY love to hear more about what you are up to! Please send us your updates whenever you get a chance! Thank you!

— Class Correspondents: Hannah Burnett (hannahbcburnett@gmail.com), Tim Henderson (tim.k.henderson@gmail.com), Mike Waters (m.lewiswaters@gmail.com).

The New York area is bustling with 2011ers. Patrick Tivnan started medical school at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in August. • Jonathan Kay recently moved uptown and just started his first year at Columbia Law School. • Liana Fong graduated from Bank Street with a master’s in education. She’s teaching second grade this year at Avenues, an immersion school only in its... second year, where students choose to spend half a day in either Mandarin or Spanish. She joined the Chinese side and uses the Chinese skills she learned at Midd! • Melida Maldonado is getting her master’s in TESOL at Teachers College, Columbia Univ. and is student teaching at her old high school, the Marble Hill School for International Studies in the Bronx.

• Denizhan Duran is working as a health-financing analyst with the Clinton Health Access Initiative in Lilongwe, Malawi. • Rhoads Cannon began studying for a master’s in Russian foreign policy at Oxford Univ. in October and was very excited to be returning to the UK for further studies. • Maggie Moslander is living in Austin, Texas, with Alyssa O’Gallagher ’12 and Emma Burke ’12. She writes, “I just started a PhD program in political science at UT Austin, and I’m loving the city so far! Especially the breakfast tacos!”

• Anthony Kuchan writes, “I’m several months into my relocation from NYC to North Carolina and I’m loving it down in Raleigh. I went to Charlotte for NFL opening weekend and got to see Steve Hauschka ’07 kick for the Seahawks in their win over the Panthers. I also met up with Steve after the game. Gary Cooper came to Raleigh for a visit before heading to Oregon for grad school (sports marketing).” • Andrew Somberg, Connor Green, and a Parliament of Lord Jeffs recently moved into a new apartment together in San Francisco. • Ishaq Sadaqah and Hebbah Saker celebrated their marriage in October in New York. He writes, “Professionally, I am working for a technology start-up based outside of Boston, before which I worked for an EMR company and consulted CVS Caremark IT in the Chicago area.” • Casey Mahoney moved (again), this time from Washington State to Washington, D.C., for a two-year stint as a Nunn-Lugar Fellow at the U.S. Dept. of Defense within the Office of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Threat Reduction and Arms Control. • Tom Crocker and Evan Doyle are living together for the fifth year in a row. They are both happily employed at Overland in Williamstown, Mass., and get to bike, hike, ski, and play throughout New England outside of work. They had the opportunity to work alongside many other Midd alums and current students, who were leading for Overland this summer. • RJ Adler has moved back to Vermont and is actually living in Middlebury, where he is the Addison County organizer for SunCommon, a solar installer in Waterbury Center. • Thanks again for the updates—keep them coming! E-mail us any time at midd2011@gmail.com.

—Class Correspondents: Ashley Cheung (cheung.ashley@gmail.com), Carly Lynch (cflynch482@gmail.com).

12 Hello classmates from 2012 and 2012.5! Here’s hoping you are all doing well wherever you may be! Here are some updates from a few of us. • Marcella Houghton is an AmeriCorps VISTA volunteer, who is working at both Laraway Youth and Family Services and Salvation Farms, supporting agricultural, educational and outreach initiatives. • Sam Hurt reports, “In June I helped contribute to the repeal of DOMA in United States v. Windsor. As a paralegal at Paul Weiss, my role was a small one, but helping to represent Edie and see the end of a law that by its very definition made gays and lesbians second-class citizens was a powerful experience and one that I was very proud to be a part of.” • Sean Mann-O’Halloran lives in Boulder, Colo., and is a yearlong intern with the American Civil Liberties Union, focusing on prisoner and indigent rights. • Alex Margarite started work this past summer in downtown Boston as a research specialist at Isaacson, Miller, an executive search firm specializing in C-level recruitment for mission-driven organizations. He says, “Thanks to the Midd professors who taught me the humility and artistry that define the research process.” • Emmy Masur says, “I’m at Goucher College doing a post-baccalaureate, premedical program. I’m taking all the courses I need in order to apply to medical school this spring.” • After a stint as an editor at the Huffington Post, Joanna Rothkopf is pursuing her MA in journalism at Columbia Univ. • Astrid Schanz-Garbassi just moved to Providence, R.I., where the density of flannel-wearing, beard-growing, beer-brewing granola-eaters is exceeded only by that of Proctors. “I’m part of a fellowship program called Venture for America (like TFA but for people that want to work at early-stage companies instead of schools). If you’re not loving your current gig, please check it out! Midd kids Taylor Sundali, Alex Be, and Peter DiPrinzio ’13 did and they love it just as much as I do (they guys!).” • Nadia Schreiber is now working in the Office of the President at Barnard College and trying to readjust to life in NYC. • Robin Sheasley says, “I’m living in Alaska and just got a new job working as a dog handler and trainer at a dog daycare that specializes in rehabilitating rescues and injured or recovering dogs. I love it! It’s challenging and rewarding and not at all what I imagined I would be doing a year after graduating.” • Barbara Wilkinson has started her first year of medical school at Case Western Reserve Univ in Cleveland, Ohio, where she’s also pursuing a master’s in bioethics. It’s a whirlwind, but she’s loving every minute of it. • Congratulations to Hannah Judge and Anna Clements whose startups, Broad Street Maps, was selected as a finalist for the International Telecommunication Union 2013 Young Innovators Competition. Out of 600 applications from 88 countries, Broad Street Maps was the only American organization that was invited to present their ideas at the UN’s 2013 ITU Telecom World Conference in Bangkok in November. • Be sure to drop Sara Cohen or Paige Keren a line with an update!

—Class Correspondents: Sara Cohen (ivrbenso@gmail.com); Paige Keren (pkeren21@gmail.com).

13 Many recent Midd graduates have jumped right back into education! Perhaps in a bit of a different role than they’re used to, 2013 alums are teaching all over the world. • Rosa Gandler writes, “I’m teaching kindergarten in the Bronx with a charter school network called Success Academy. I have 30 wonderful scholars who are called the Class of 2030, because that is the year they will graduate from college!” • Kate Anderson passes along this dispatch from Hawaii: “I teach special education inclusion in math and science classes for high school students on the leeward coast of Oahu. I think education is a great tool for social change, and I hope I can expand my Native Hawaiian students’ opportunities to explore the world, while learning a lot about their culture and community.” • Cody Gohl is on a Fulbright in the Kalasin Province of Thailand, teaching English to young Thai students with goals “to offer them a different perspective on what education is and what it can be.” You can read more about his time there by following this blog: Atleasfallbright.blogspot.com. • Elma Burnham, on the other hand, remains in the Champlain Valley; she is completing the student teaching practicum with the Education Studies Dept. in a wonderful 5th and 6th grade classroom at the Lincoln Community School. • Aya Gallego reports, “I am an 8th grade reading teacher and am enrolled in a grad program called Relay Graduate School of Education.” • Barbara Ofosu-Somuah says, “The Watson experience so far has been a mix of a lot things. I spent my first month, August, experiencing Carifesta, which is a Caribbean festival of arts and culture. After two months in Rio de Janeiro, I headed to the Dominican Republic.” • Nathan Arnosti works for the NYC Parks Dept. as a press officer. • Since graduating, Corinne Prevot has settled in Burlington to run her company, Skida, full time. She recently opened a showroom and workspace for her line of Vermont-made and ski-inspired headwear and accessories in the heart of Burlington’s South End arts district. With the launch of a new kid’s collection, Corinne plans to develop the business and expand the product line while keeping all of the manufacturing in the U.S. • Bronwyn Oatley is an associate with Studio Y, a new innovation, leadership, and impact academy for young people in Ontario. • Peter DiPrinzio is a fellow with Venture for America, which recruits recent grads to work at start-ups for two years in growing cities across America, where they learn the skills needed to start their own companies. He currently lives in Baltimore and works for Pixelelligent Technologies, a nanotech start-up making materials for electronic devices. • Rabbi Ira Schiffer sent the news that David Imber has begun the postbac, premed program at Bryn Mawr.

—Class Correspondents: Elma Burnham (ecburnham@gmail.com); Peter DiPrinzio (peterd1331@gmail.com).
OBITUARIES

30 Conwell W. Abbott, 103, of Windham, N.H., on January 12, 2013. After working various jobs during the Depression, he joined the Air Corps in 1941 and spent three years in London with the Headquarters Squadron of the 8th Air Force. After the war he joined Kenyon and Eckhardt, where he served as an accountant for 32 years. Predeceased by wife Frances (Judge) and son James, he is survived by daughter Ruth, seven grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

34 Carolyn Stafford Langdon, 100, of Hartford, Conn., on December 13, 2012. She taught at the Norwich Free Academy for five years then from 1947 to 1955, she was involved with dog training. From 1993 to 1997 she was a freelance magazine and newspaper writer of gardening, dog training, and New England history. Predeceased by husband Howard, she is survived by son Howard, two grandsons, and three great-grandchildren.

38 Arne Bulkeley Beltz, 95, of Anchorage, Alaska, on February 1, 2013. With a nursing degree from Yale School of Nursing, she worked for the Visiting Nurse Service in both NYC and Georgia before serving as an Army nurse during WWII in the Philippines. Moving to Alaska, she worked as a public health nurse for many years, becoming the supervisor for the Health Dept. and then the division manager of physical health. In 1990 the Health Dept. building in Anchorage was named for her and she was inducted into the Alaska Women's Hall of Fame, Class of 2013. Predeceased by husband William, sons Mark and Axel, and daughter Katherine, she is survived by son William, three grandchildren, and two great-grandsons. Deceased Middlebury relatives include sister Marjorie Bulkeley Garwood '37.

40 Frederic L. Davis, 94, of Indianapolis, Ind., on January 14, 2013. During WWII he served in the South Pacific with the Navy and after the war continued with the Navy Reserve, retiring as a lieutenant commander. With a degree from the Wharton School of Business, he had a long career with RCA as a computer programmer and systems analyst. He is survived by wife Lois, children Peter, Lindsay, and Chris, and one grandchild.

Virginia Tiffany Leighton, 94, formerly of Winsted, Conn., on January 13, 2013. At Middlebury she was in Phi Mu and worked on the Campus. After graduation she worked as a technician at MIT and Lever Bros. She was an active volunteer in many organizations. She also played cello with the Torrington Civic Symphony and was their historian. Predeceased by husband Frank, she is survived by sons Jeffrey and Roger, daughter Cynthia, six grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Surviving Middlebury relatives include cousin Tiffany Clark Nourse '47 and husband Bart '48.

41 Mary Nelson Loud, 92, of South Portland, Maine, on January 31, 2013. After graduation she taught high school French and Spanish before working at John Hancock in Boston. While raising her children she was an active volunteer for the Scouts and her church. When her husband formed his business, she handled financial matters. Predeceased by husband Will, she is survived by daughter Cynthia, son Philip, and six grandchildren.

William E. McMahon, 95, of Greensboro, N.C., on December 31, 2012. While at Middlebury he participated in cross-country running and track and was a member of Sigma Epsilon. During WWII, he served in the Coast Guard, attaining the rank of lieutenant. He had a career in copyediting and proofreading, first with Curtis Publishing Co. then with Playboy magazine. Wife Eileen (Roberts) survives him.

43 Eleanor Wilcox Murphy, 91, of Bennington, Vt., on January 2, 2013. At Middlebury she was in Sigma Kappa. After graduation she taught at Arlington (Vt.) High School and worked at Bennington College. She was an active volunteer with the Red Cross and Southwestern Vermont Medical Center. Predeceased by husband Arthur and daughter Janice, she is survived by son Kevin, daughter Candace, and two grandchildren.

Margaret A. Booker, 87, of Manhasset, N.Y., on November 15, 2012. A Phi Mu at Middlebury, she completed a secretarial course after college and worked in various companies, including the Guggenheim Foundation, Mutual Broadcasting, the Merrill Anderson Co., the MS Society, and Turner Construction Co.

Natalie M. Fox, 87, of Sudbury, Mass., on January 16, 2013. At Middlebury she was a Sigma Kappa. She taught English at Whitman (Mass.) High School then after becoming certified as a special education teacher, taught in the Waltham (Mass.) High School. She also tutored in the Sudbury schools. She is survived by husband George, son James, daughters Meredith, Linda, and Alison, and seven grandchildren.

Bette Bertschinger Saul, 89, of Gladwyne, Pa., on January 6, 2013. At Middlebury she played tennis, worked on the Campus, was a member of Pi Beta Phi, and served as president of her class. She was a generous contributor of time and effort to numerous charity causes. She and her husband also traveled extensively around the world. She is survived by husband Ralph, son Robert, daughter Jane, and four grandchildren as well as brother James '45.

Katherine Rapp Nathan, 84, of Brooklyn, N.Y., on December 13, 2011. With a master's of science in education from Hofstra, she taught sixth grade. After becoming a certified Brailleist, she was an itinerant teacher of the blind and visually handicapped for eight years. She then obtained schooling in computer programming and worked on IBM mainframes for 13 years before retiring to various part-time jobs. Predeceased by husband Donald, she is survived by daughters Amy and Judy, son Michael, and three grandchildren.

Carolyn Kanen Tynan, 86, of Pompton Plains, N.J., on January 8, 2013. After attending secretarial school, she worked as a legal secretary for 19 years at Hooper and Dunham in NYC. She also earned her private pilot's license. She was active in genealogy, quilting, and with the DAR. She is survived by husband Howard, son James, and one grandson.

49 Cynthia Buehr Haas, 85, of Puerta Vallarta, Mexico, on January 30, 2013. She lived abroad for several years and worked for a time at the Paris Herald Tribune. She held a number of publishing and travel jobs in NYC, including as the travel editor for Glamour Magazine. She also worked briefly for Al Italia Airlines. She was twice married, first to Michel Seneque and later to Ernst Haas, the well-known photographer. She is survived by daughters Christina Seneque and Victoria Haas, and son Alexander Haas, as well as step-sister Wendy Buehr Murphy '56.

William von Dreele, 88, of Allendale, N.J., on January 19, 2013. During WWII he served with the Army's 78th Infantry Division, fighting in the European Theater. A Theta Chi at Middlebury, he earned his master's from NYU. He worked as a writer in the communications dept. at IBM for 25 years. He also contributed political verse to the National Review and later published If Liberals Had Feathers, Gee, What a Hunter You'd Be and There's Something about a Liberal. In 1991 he was commissioned by William F. Buckley Jr. to write new interludes for Camille Saint-Saén's Carnival of Animals, to replace original verse by Ogden Nash. In 1997 Middlebury bestowed an honorary Doctor of Letters on him. He is survived by sister Elizabeth.

50 Leigh R. Wright, 87, of Honolulu, Hawaii, on January 11, 2013. In 1943 he was drafted into the Navy, serving in Puerto Rico. At Middlebury he was in Theta Chi. With a master's in history and politics, he worked seven years in Washington, D.C., as a political analyst before moving to London to earn his PhD in Asian history. He began a long career in teaching at the Univ of Hong Kong for 22 years and also taught at Russell Sage College and the Univ of Hawaii at Manoa. He produced and collaborated on several books on history and Asian culture. Predeceased by two sisters and brother Vernon '41, he is survived by a sister and three brothers.
IN MEMORIAM

APRIL 7, 1925-NOVEMBER 30, 2013

Barbara Holme Conroe, 81, of Ballston Spa, N.Y., on January 14, 2013. An Alpha Xi Delta at Middlebury, she graduated summa cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa. After raising her children, she became the secretary of the Potsdam (N.Y.) Public Library until 1986. Moving to the Saratoga Springs, N.Y., area, she began 20 years of volunteering in the Saratoga Hospital emergency dept. and served as an officer in the volunteer guild of the hospital. Survivors include husband Bruce, sons Scott, David, and John, daughter Laurie, six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

Russell C. Briggs, 80, of Portland, Maine, on January 21, 2013. A Chi Psi at Middlebury, he earned his medical degree from the Albany Medical College of Union Univ. After a residency in radiology at the UVM hospitals, he spent two years as a radiologist at the U.S. Naval Submarine Base in Groton, Conn. With a fellowship, he taught at the Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, before joining the staff of the radiology dept. at Maine Medical Center in Portland. On his retirement in 1994, the Russell C. Briggs Award for Teaching was established. He is survived by wife Barbara (McKnight), daughters Katherine '85 and Elizabeth, sons Thomas, John, and William, and four grandchildren. Surviving Middlebury relatives include great-niece Emily Sitt '14. Deceased Middlebury relatives include brother John Briggs '55.

Gordon L. Brown Jr., 81, of North Conway, N.H., on January 10, 2013. At Middlebury he was on the ski team and the ski patrol, which he continued throughout his life. He owned and ran the Willard D. Martin Insurance and Real Estate Agency in Marblehead, Mass., and was involved in many community organizations. Predeceased by wife Judy (Berry) '55, he is survived by partner Sylvia Swain, daughter Donna, sons Douglas and Geoffrey, five grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

Elizabeth Curit Gosselin, 78, of North Yarmouth, Maine, on January 10, 2013. A Delta Delta at Middlebury, she began her career as a chemist with American Cyanamid. She later edited scientific journals and worked for several banks. In the mid-1990s she became a real estate broker before she and her husband founded Yarmouth Auto Sales, which they ran for over 10 years until retiring in 2005. She is survived by husband Paul, sons Chris, Eric, and John, and five grandchildren.

Gaydell Maier Collier, 77, of Sundance, Wyo., on January 18, 2013. While living in Laramie, Wyo., she collaborated on three books about horses and worked as the circulation manager at the Univ. of Wyoming library. In Sundance, she became the Crook County library director for 14 years and in 1990 was named the Librarian of the Year by the Wyoming Library Assoc. She also operated her ranch bookstore, Backpocket Books. She edited several books with women writers and in 2012, published her memoir, Just Beyond Harmony. Predeceased by husband Roy, daughter Jenny, and son Frank, she is survived by son Sam and daughter Seda, eight grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

H. William Koster Jr., 76, of Salisbury, Conn., on January 30, 2013. At Middlebury he was in Zeta Psi and worked on the Campus. After his first job as a reporter at Dunn and Bradstreet in Rhode Island, he worked at several banks before beginning a 25-year career at Salomon Brothers and Daiwa Securities. Survivors include wife Helen (Howard), daughters Karen and Margaret '87, sons H. William III and Michael, and 10 grandchildren.

Josephine B. Lenfestey, 73, of San Francisco, Calif., on January 2, 2013. A Kappa Kappa Gamma at Middlebury, she worked in Washington, D.C., after graduation for a congressman before moving to Europe and working for Radio Free Europe. In 1967 she moved to NYC and worked for the Museum of Modern Art in public relations. Settling in San Francisco, she worked as a political consultant. She is survived by sister Lynn and brother Jim.

George C. Brox, 72, of Hobe Sound, Fla., on January 1, 2013. In Sigma Epsilon at Middlebury, he was in the Coast Guard before earning his MBA at Boston College. He was the vice president of Brox Industries for many years. Survivors include wife Vicky (Slusher), daughters Melanie and Jessica, and six grandchildren.

Eileen Glasoe Latreille, 72, of Menasha, Wis., on January 12, 2013. She was an active volunteer while raising her children, serving the United Way, Visiting Nurse Assoc., and Meals on Wheels among other organizations. In Wisconsin she worked with the Neenah-Menasha Emergency Society and as a docent at the Bergstrom Mahler Museum. She was a gifted photographer. She is survived by husband Phil '61, sons Philip, Stephen, and Douglas, and seven grandchildren. Surviving Middlebury relatives include sisters Maren Hexter '59 and Nordis Glasoe '68.
IN MEMORIAM

The following is a list of deaths reported to us since the previous issue went to the printers. Full obituaries will appear in future issues of the magazine.

Nancy Moores Poltrack ’32 ..................................... July 26, 2013
Louise Hubbard McCoy ’36 ..................................... October 13, 2013
Marshall Sewell ’37 .............................................. November 7, 2013
Beverly Barton Hall ’40 .......................................... September 18, 2013
Kenneth L. Temple ’40 .......................................... September 30, 2013
Mary Lloyd Weaver ’40 ........................................... November 12, 2013
Jean E. Emmens ’41 ............................................ November 11, 2013
Charlotte Miller Karr ’41 ......................................... October 25, 2013
Mary Clough Johnstone ’42 ..................................... September 11, 2013
Helen C. Bailey ’44 .............................................. November 22, 2013
Priscilla Hodges Headl ’45 ..................................... September 11, 2013
Charlotte P. Hickcox ’45 ......................................... October 5, 2013
Rose Hull Terrill ’47 ............................................. September 19, 2013
Nancy Weale McGuire ’48 ....................................... September 25, 2013
Seabury T. Short Jr. ’49 ........................................... September 7, 2013
Jack Barlow ’49 ................................................... November 9, 2013
Janet McIntosh Straley ’50 ..................................... November 20, 2013
Karl S. Rannenberg Jr. ’51 .................................... September 29, 2013
Carol Brautigam Andrews ’52 ................................ November 13, 2013
Kenneth A. Nourse ’52 ......................................... November 10, 2013
Patricia Heap Rockwell ’53 .................................... November 6, 2013
Robert C. Royce ’53 ............................................. October 31, 2013
Hazel Hoxie Greaves ’54 ......................................... October 20, 2013
John W. Ackerman ’55 ......................................... November 22, 2013
Mary Bachman Wright ’58 ..................................... October 28, 2013
Edward J. Fairbanks Jr. ’60 .................................... November 7, 2013
Richard S. Rubin ’61 ............................................ September 20, 2013
Eugene D. Sapadin ’61 .......................................... September 19, 2013
Richard H. Kennedy ’65 ....................................... October 29, 2013
Albert Reilly II ’65 ............................................... October 17, 2013
William H. Wright III ’65 ...................................... September 6, 2013
Walter C. Green ’69 ............................................. October 6, 2013
Burnett G. Bartley III ’72 .................................... October 14, 2013
Lois K. Ongley ’73 ............................................... November 16, 2013
Pamela Klimenok Parsons ’73 ................................ October 13, 2013
Gretchen L. Witt ’77 ........................................... September 11, 2013
Elizabeth Dorr McKinley ’82 .................................. November 9, 2013
Donovan S. Dickson ’11 ......................................... October 5, 2013

GRADUATE SCHOOLS
Arch J. Welton, MA French ’49 ................................ May 22, 2013
Edgar A. Gauthier, MA French ’55 ................................ November 24, 2013
Maurice A. Cagnon, MA French ’61 .......................... July 18, 2013
Michelle Barnes Infinger, MA French ’77 ..................... October 15, 2013
Dorothea K. Kuta, MA German ’64 ........................... May 15, 2013
Janet Guagenti Leuci, MA Italian ’64 ......................... November 20, 2013
Sr. Carmela Melucci, MA Italian ’75 ........................ September 11, 2013
Clifford J. Gallant, MA Spanish ’54 .......................... October 14, 2013
Thomas F. Haupt, MA Spanish ’55 .......................... September 21, 2013
Peter W. Stites, MA Spanish ’58 ................................ October 16, 2013
J. Ernest Belanger, MA Spanish ’66 .......................... October 22, 2013
Wendy N. Greenberg, MA Spanish ’96 ...................... August 28, 2013

Bryant D. Jones, 71, of Burlington, Vt., on January 12, 2013. A KDR at Middlebury, he left after two years to join the Army Security Agency. After earning his BA in math from UVM, he began a career in teaching, working 19 years at the Shelburne (Vt.) Middle School. He was also an instructor at Champlain College. He is survived by son Douglas, daughter Amy, and two granddaughters.

Paul A. Witteman, 69, of New York, N.Y., on January 1, 2013. At Middlebury he was in Delta Upsilon and played basketball. After graduation he served as an infantry lieutenant in South Korea during the Vietnam War. He returned to Middlebury and served a few years as the last sports information director at the College before the position was eliminated. With a degree from the Columbia Univ. School of Journalism, he joined the staff at Time, becoming deputy chief of correspondents and then assisting managing editor for Sports Illustrated. He is survived by wife Ellie McGrath and daughter Kate.

Kenneth L. Bergstrom, 64, of Essex Junction, Vt., on February 1, 2013. A Zeta Psi at Middlebury, he had a long career in education. With an MEd, a CAGS, and a doctoral degree in leadership and policy studies from UVM, he taught middle grades for 15 years and was a founding member of the Vermont Middle Grades Professional Development Collaborative. He also taught at Goddard College and Union Institute & University. He is survived by daughters Timiny and Tatiana, stepdaughters Heather and Elisabeth, and one grandson.

Laura K. Krebill, 63, of Wellington, Colo., on January 11, 2013. With a master's in literature from UNC at Chapel Hill, she worked for various corporations including the Minnesota Education Technology Alliance and Team Labs Corp. She was preceded in death by her parents, sister, and brother.

Jennifer Croland Leuthke, 49, of Haworth, N.J., on January 2, 2013. She was an avid runner and loved music. Predeceased by father Barry ‘59, she is survived by mother Joan, Michael, and sons Andrew, Benjamin, Michael, and William. Surviving Middlebury relatives include David Krugman ‘58, Andrew Krugman ‘60, and sister Lizabeth Sarakin ‘84. Deceased Middlebury relatives include B. Richard Grant ‘59.

FACULTY
Jacques A. Jimenez, 75, of Stamford, Conn., on August 25, 2013. After attending St. Patrick's Seminary in Menlo Park, Calif., he was ordained as a Catholic priest by the San Francisco Archdiocese. He served as a parish priest and taught high school before leaving the priesthood and earning an Ed.D. from UMass in Amherst. He was the director of the teacher education dept. at Middlebury from 1973-1979 before leaving to teach at the Mead School in Greenwich, Conn., and work at Communispond in NYC. He then cofounded his own company, Communication Patterns. He is survived by wife Polly, daughters Jessica and Angela, and two grandchildren.

STAFF
George McPhail Jr., 77, of Middlebury, Vt., on August 17, 2013. In 1990, he moved his family to Orono, Maine, so he could attend the Univ. of Maine as a freshman at age 34. With a degree in mechanical engineering, he accepted a position at the International Paper Co. in Ticonderoga, N.Y. In 1998 he began his career at the College as a staff engineer in Facilities Services and was promoted to assistant director in 2005. He enjoyed bass fishing and kayaking. Predeceased by daughter Traci, he is survived by wife Karen and daughter Betsy.

GRADUATE SCHOOLS
Ruth Seifert Phelps, 91, MA German, of Durham, N.C., on October 20, 2013. She taught German at Elon College and piano at Duke Univ. and was the church organist at Duke Memorial Methodist Church for many years.

Karen O. Austin, 68, MA Spanish, of Oak Grove, Miss., on October 31, 2013. With a PhD in Spanish from the Univ. of Kentucky, she joined the faculty of the Univ. of Southern Mississippi in the Dept. of Foreign Languages in 1971. She initiated the Spanish for Law Enforcement program.

Fitzgerald L. Booker, 58, MA English, of Durham, N.C., on October 25, 2012. With a PhD in botany from North Carolina State Univ., he worked for the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture with a joint appointment in the Dept. of Crop Science at North Carolina State Univ. His research focused on the mechanisms by which air pollution negatively impacts crops.

William A. Kromer, 66, MA English, of Hancock, N.Y., on October 2, 2012. For 30 years he taught English and Spanish at Downsville (N.Y.) Central School and also coached soccer and baseball. In retirement he taught Spanish at the Family Foundation School.

Michael D. Fisher, 59, MA French, of Douglas, Ga., on November 9, 2012. He was an emeritus professor of English and French at South Georgia College, after a distinguished 25-year teaching career.

Patricia C. Ellison, 75, MA English, of Tacoma, Wash., on October 5, 2012.
James Isbell Armstrong, the 12th president of Middlebury College, passed away on December 16 at his home in Hanover, N.H., with his wife, Carol, and family members by his side. He was 94 years old.

Armstrong served as president from 1963 through 1975 during one of the most turbulent periods in U.S. history, a time marked by war abroad and assassinations at home, when American streets were embroiled in the fight for civil rights and when the global economy was faltering. On campus there was unrest, social change, and financial stringency. And yet when James Armstrong left office, he had done nothing less than establish Middlebury as one of the top liberal arts colleges in the country. During his time at the College, he instituted the first tenure system at Middlebury, initiated a faculty research fund, created a professional leave program, enlarged the size of the faculty, increased faculty salaries, reduced teaching loads, and had a direct hand in shaping curriculum and academic policy.

"Jim loved Middlebury and his leadership and commitment remade this institution into the center of excellence it remains to this day. We all owe him our gratitude and thanks," President Ron Liebowitz wrote in an e-mail to the Middlebury community.

Born on April 20, 1919, and raised in Princeton, N.J., Armstrong prepared for college at the Taft School in Connecticut and returned home in 1937 to enroll at the university where his father, William P. Armstrong, was a member of the faculty. James Armstrong graduated from Princeton, Phi Beta Kappa with a major in classics, just a few months before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. He enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1941, served with Army Intelligence in the Pacific, and rose from the rank of private to captain. He was awarded the Bronze Star for meritorious service and was discharged in 1946. Armstrong was called back into uniform in 1951-1952 for the Korean War.

Between the wars he was awarded a Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship and earned a PhD in Greek literature from Princeton in 1949. While pursuing his doctoral studies, Armstrong discovered his love of teaching Greek to undergraduates and his passion for sharing the intricacies of Homeric literature.

He held instructor positions at Princeton and Indiana University before accepting his alma mater’s offer of an assistant professorship in the classics department in 1954. He subsequently was appointed assistant dean of the graduate school and was later promoted to associate professor and associate dean of the graduate school.

In 1963, as Middlebury’s 11th president, Sam Stratton, was preparing to step down from office, the Board of Trustees’ search committee, chaired by L. Douglas Meredith, approached the 44-year-old Armstrong.

As writer David Bain recounted in The College on the Hill, Armstrong had developed “a reputation for scholarship at Princeton as he moved beyond the classroom into administration. With his academic aura and enthusiasm for Homeric epics and oral poetry, Armstrong [would offer] a marked contrast to the retiring, often imperious, President Stratton with his business school background.”

In his inaugural address, delivered on November 8, 1963, Armstrong said: “There is no room in this hour of man’s history on earth for luxury education with finishing-school overtones, for fads, frills, and fringes.... What is at stake here at Middlebury is the importance and relevance of the liberal arts and liberal sciences—here and now—in the space-atomic-computer-satellite age—this age of segregation and inequality, persecution and intolerance, prejudice and provincialism—yet at the same time this age of social and moral concern, of internationalism and cooperation, of gigantic strides in understanding through communication.”

The new college president received a Western Union telegram on his inauguration day. It read: "I extend to you my warmest best wishes and my full confidence that you will sustain the high traditions and standards that have been set by Middlebury College. You bring to this new assignment an outstanding record of scholarship, and it is most heartening that your talents will now serve this important and influential institution.”

The telegram was signed "John F. Kennedy.”

The new College president embarked on an ambitious fund-raising effort, turning first to the Ford Foundation before launching a capital campaign. By the third anniversary of his inauguration, the College had raised $8.3 million. The Armstrong administration built Sunderland Language Center (1965), Johnson Memorial Music and Art Building (1968), the Science Center (1968), the four dormitories Kelly-Hadley-Lang-Milliken (1969-1971), the Social-Dining Units (1970), which later became the Freeman International Center, and Fletcher Field House (1974).

During Armstrong’s tenure of office, Carr Hall was converted into an infirmary and four other buildings—Voter, Warner, Munroe, and Old Chapel—were renovated to accommodate Middlebury’s growing enrollment and increased size of the faculty and staff.

Though capital projects may have been the most visible campus changes during Armstrong’s tenure, he had just as great an impact in other arenas, as well. The summer language programs expanded to include schools in Chinese (1966) and Japanese (1970), while the Language Schools and Schools Abroad added courses at the undergraduate level when, heretofore, coursework had been for master’s and doctoral degree candidates only. In addition, Armstrong and the trustees launched the 175Th Anniversary Campaign in 1971 with the goal of raising $10.5 million. At its conclusion, the campaign had raised more than $13.8 million.

In the fall of 1974, Armstrong informed the trustees of his intention to resign on September 1, 1975, to become the president of the Charles A. Dana Foundation, where he served six years. During his tenure the foundation completed construction of the Dana Building at the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute, established the $2.5 million Dana Distinguished Conductors Endowment at the New York Philharmonic, opened the Dana Cancer Center in Boston, and set in motion the construction of the Dana Education Wing at the American Museum of Natural History.

In 1977 Armstrong returned to Middlebury to accept the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters. The citation read, in part: "New centers for the arts, the languages, and the sciences, and an unprecedented six endowed professional chairs are tangible evidence of your vigorous and confident administration. Yet we know that the educational successes which honor you the most are the many gifted scholars and teachers you brought to this college on the hill.”

After leaving the Dana Foundation in 1981, Armstrong and his wife, the former Carol Aymar, whom he married in 1942, retired to their farm in Wells, Maine. Though Armstrong turned aside a number of offers to return to higher education in the 1980s, when Westbrook College called in 1986 he accepted an interim presidency. The small coeducational school located about 35 miles “down east” from the farm in Wells needed an experienced chief executive to guide it through a difficult, one-year period of transition. Later, Westbrook College (now part of the University of New England) named James Armstrong an “honorary alumnus” for "showing unusual interest and giving substantial service” to the institution and its graduates.

In 1999 James and Carol Armstrong returned to Middlebury for the dedication of the James I. Armstrong Library, the College’s science library located on two floors inside the magnificent, new Bicentennial Hall. In 2010 the College established the James I. Armstrong Professorship in Classical Studies in honor of Armstrong and his lasting and far-reaching contributions to Middlebury.

Predeceased by daughter Carol and grandson David, Armstrong is survived by wife Carol, son James Jr., director of choirs at the College of William and Mary, daughter Elizabeth, associate professor of East Asian studies at Bucknell University, and grandchildren Christopher, Jamieson, Robert, Caecilia, Rebekah, and Mariah.
Classifieds

ANTIQUES
Stone Block Antiques. 219 Main St., Vergennes, Vermont 05491. Fridays 9am-9pm or by chance/appointment. Furniture, silver, paintings, rugs, porcelain, etc. Downsizing and/or have items you no longer need? I travel throughout the Northeast for quality antiques, estates. Greg Hamilton ’79. 802.877.3359 or sbainc57@yahoo.com. www.stoneblockantiques.com.

LOGDING & WEDDINGS

REAL ESTATE
PrivateCommunities.com
Tour the top retirement, vacation and golf communities at www.PrivateCommunities.com.

In Today’s Global Market, Real Estate Is Still A Local Business. Are you planning an international real estate transaction? Call a member of the International Real Estate Federation (FIABCI). Gain access to our network of 5,000 members in 50 countries worldwide. Contact Christine Fraioh, CRS, Realtor, Lang McLaughry Spera Middlebury. 802.385.1112, cfvt@gmavt.net; www.VERMONTlodgingproperties.com.

VACATION RENTALS
BreadLoaf Retreat. Adjacent to the BL campus; mountain views and open fields. Charming home with modern kitchens and bathrooms, fireplaces, wrap-around porch, grill, bicycles. Rent weekly as 4 BR/3.5 bath; 3 BR/2.5 bath; or 1 BR/1 bath. See: www.bicknelladvisory.com/vermonthouse. Phone 303.955.7865.

Cornwall, 4 miles college. Idyllic, peaceful setting. Green Mountains and starry skies thrown in. Modern but eclectic. Three-bedrooms. www.sites.google.com/site/uphoriaus/

Rent by the Day, Week, Month in Lincoln, VT. Need an inexpensive place to stay when visiting Middlebury and surrounds? Search: “Luxury Barn Apartment near Middlebury” on www.Airbnb.com, then call 802.385.1112.

Fort Myers Beach Condominium on the Gulf of Mexico. Wonderful birds, great sunsets, Naples culture nearby. Two bedrooms and baths. Monthly minimum Jan. 1-April 30. Two week minimum rest of year. Now available 04/15/14 and beyond. Contact 203.637.0553 or bbluce@aol.com.

Italian Rental. Historic house and garden with panoramic views in Civita di Bagnoregio, small hilltown between Rome and Florence. Sleeps up to six. $1,600 weekly. Carol Watts, cmwatts@mac.com, http://www.civitarental.com/

REACH OUT TO 50,000 ALUMNI
Advertise in Middlebury Magazine
For display and classified advertising please contact Abby Hummel
18 Garfield Street, Bristol, VT 05443
Phone 802.453.2913
E-mail: Abby@GetSmartVT.com

Spectacular Property in Weybridge! 103± acres of open and wooded land within a mile of downtown Middlebury & Middlebury College. Sweeping views of the Green Mountains, southerly views to the College, and across fields through the valley. Easy access to walking/running trails & great road biking. Septic design in place. $525,000 MLS#4207545

Ingrid Punderson Jackson ’88
Real Estate
44 Main Street
Middlebury, VT 05753
802-388-4292
www.middvermontrealestate.com

IN OUR OFFICE

Lang & McLaughry Real Estate
103 Main Street
Middlebury, VT 05753
802.384.6918
www.langmclaughry.com

FERRY WATCH — Historic estate beautifully sited with 825 ft of waterfront on Lake Champlain. Grand Isle, VT $2,390,000

WEST HILL HOUSE — This home seamlessly blends into the panoramic mountain vistas! Wallingford, VT $1,285,000

RIVERDALE — Premier Post & Beam with 150 ft of frontage on the CT River. Kent, CT $995,000

LENFIELD ESTATE — Distinguished 1776 Colonial with original windows, hardwoods and finishes. Deer, VT $4,500,000

FINE VERMONT & NEW HAMPSHIRE PROPERTIES
550 Hinesburg Road, South Burlington  802.846.7939 or 800.876.6447  www.LionDavis.com  www.LMSRE.com

John and Rita Elder are downsizing and selling their North Street Home of 36 years. Features include: wrap-around porch in excellent shape; four bedrooms, two studies, and two bathrooms; beautiful wooden floors; modern, well appointed kitchen; insulated and electrified barn used as a wood shop; photovoltaic panels on barn roof; wood-fired pizza oven in spacious back yard; and large vegetable garden with in-ground watering system. $315,000

Please contact the Elders with any questions at elder2348@gmail.com.
Showings will be arranged by our realtor Bonnie Gridley of Re/Max in Middlebury: gridleyb@comcast.net.
Bristol Farmhouse

This storybook farmhouse sits on a level one-acre lot which is fully fenced. Inside the fence, there is a treehouse, a rope swing, an apple tree supplying enough apples to fill your freezer with applesauce and apple pies. A vegetable garden. A two-story barn with storage on ground level and finished "studio" space on the second level. There's a lot going on in the pretty back yard. Inside the farmhouse, a cozy woodstove greets you and the family gathers in the large kitchen. Nothing fancy here, but a whole lot of character and charm. $241,000

Nestled in the Mountains

Private country 4-BR house on 4.5 acres with separate bldg. housing art studio space and airy, light-filled studio apt. The house has an open floor plan with kitchen/living/dining combined in space containing a fireplace and a woodstove. Large, south-facing paned windows overlook the gardens. Decks expand the living space in warm weather. TWO ponds, a rustic wood-heated sauna, storage sheds and a chicken coop. This is a magical property that needs to be experienced to appreciate. $429,000

Bill Beck
Real Estate
billbeck.com
Call Jan Bark at 802-989-0002

Great Location in New Haven!

In 2011 this home was completely renovated! The exterior was taken down to the frame, insulated, re-sided, and new windows were installed. The interior has all new sheetrock, paint, and carpeting. A beautiful new kitchen has stainless steel appliances, and new floor. There is a covered front porch with privacy hedge, and a deck out back for catching Adirondack views and sunsets. This is definitely a must see for anyone looking for an easy commute to Middlebury or Burlington. Priced well below the $285K private appraisal at $249,900.

Christine Fraioli '74 and John K. Nelson - Realtors, CRS, SRES, CIPS, TREC

Lang McLaughry
REAL ESTATE
Middlebury
802-385-1112 / 1113 • 66 Court Street • Middlebury, VT 05753
www.VermontLodgingProperties.com

Starksboro, Vermont

Thoughtfully designed by a local architect, this home interior evokes peace and tranquility. Floor to ceiling glass brings you close to the outdoors. Central living room with exposed beams and glorious fireplace- master suite and 2 guest suites provide generous living space. Covered porches, stone walls, playful yard, and trails through the woods add to the charming character of this much loved home. A place to call home or a family retreat, this home is sure to create lasting memories. $600,000

Ingrid Punderson Jackson '88
Real Estate
14 Main Street
Middlebury, VT 05753
802-388-4242
www.middvermontreal estate.com

BEST IN CLASS
BUYER’S RESOURCE

Wyoming is #1 Tax-Friendly State in the US
www.JacksonHoleRealEstateSearch.com

When buying real estate in an unfamiliar market, you need consulting, not salesmanship. Andrew Cornish of the Cornish-Lamppa Realty Group heads a team that is not only experienced in real estate sales, but as founder of Jackson’s largest real estate appraisal firm, has over 50 years of combined valuation experience to put to work for you.

Andrew Cornish (Class of 1989) | Broker/Owner
andrew@brokerageathletes.com

JACKSONHOLE
REAL ESTATE SEARCH
BEST IN CLASS
(307) 733-8899

www.middvermontreal estate.com

Winter 2014 95
On Teaching

My husband and I never dreamt we’d teach at Middlebury. It doesn’t seem so long ago that we met as students. Rob Ackerman ’80 was in Spain on a junior-year abroad, and I was getting my master’s in Spanish. We met in a graduate theater class in Madrid. Our homework was to see a play. Rob and I saw the play—and began seeing each other. This was in 1978. By 1990, we were married and had two daughters. In 2008, our second, Emme, applied early decision to Middlebury. One tense December morning, she leaned into her laptop and pressed in a code. She got in!

Two years later, Rob and I drove from Manhattan to Middlebury to hear her sing a cappella and to ski at the Snow Bowl. (Rob’s and my pre-nup agreement had been that I’d learn to ski. Why? Because if I skied, I might enjoy winter rather than hunkering down like a bear in a cave waiting for it to be over.)

January 2011, however, was brutal. After three freezing runs, I decided to warm up in the lodge. Rob kept skiing and met an alum, Sam Silver ’86, on a chairlift. Sam was teaching a J-term class and said it was incredibly hard, incredibly fun, and that his course on the death penalty ended with a mock trial at the Addison County Courthouse. When Sam learned that Rob and I are writers, he said we should think about teaching too.

Emme, Class of 2013.5, approved the idea, bless her. So we applied, sending in proposals and résumés. Rob would teach Writing American Theater; I would teach Writing First Person. When we heard back in June, it was the old-fashioned way: thick snail-mail envelopes. We got in!

Now we had to consider two important matters: (i) Who would take care of our cat? (2) How would we teach writing? Finding a cat-sitter proved easy, but preparing our syllabi took weeks. It was not easy to figure out how to squeeze everything we knew into just 16 seminars.

In November 2012, as I was sipping my coffee, I opened an e-mail: “I was really hoping to get into your J-term class,” it read. “Unfortunately, somehow I was too late, even though I registered right at 7 AM.”

Huh? I had a waitlist? I e-mailed Middlebury. Yes, 12 registered students, 14 hopefuls. Whooa. This was official.

Emme urged me to throw the classroom doors wide open. But I liked the idea of just a dozen Midd Kids discussing style and story, verbs and voice. We would read excerpts of memoirs, essays, and fiction, writing up a storm, and critiquing our pages together.

When I told Helen, who cleans our apartment each week, that Rob and I would be away in January, she asked, “How will you teach writing?” I said that I’d give a prompt, the students would run with it, and we’d share the work aloud in a supportive atmosphere.

“A prompt?”

“If I say, for instance, ‘your grandmother’s hands,’ the kids might look perplexed, but then they’d start writing a mile a minute—for 10 minutes.”

Helen nodded. “My grandmother, in Trinidad, had one hand that was bigger and stronger than the other. She never went to school, but she delivered all the babies in our village. All of them! I was one of nine siblings. Once, I was playing with my sister, and my grandmother and mother were in the next room. Suddenly we heard a cry, and we knew we had another baby...”

“Wow,” I said. “You get an A.”

Rob and I had a great time teaching writing last January. Full disclosure: We did some skiing too.
Live Immersed in a World Language

June 22 - July 17

Pomona College | Swarthmore College | Green Mountain College | Beijing, China | Comillas, Spain

A Summer of Language & Cultural Immersion

Middlebury-Monterey Language Academy—a summer language program for 8th-12th grade students—utilizes the same teaching methodology and immersion curriculum as Middlebury College's famed Language Schools. The Language Academy provides a supportive, pre-college environment for students who are dedicated to accelerating their proficiency in a second language. In four weeks, students gain valuable language skills to compete in today's global society.

Apply today for a transformative summer experience.

middlebury monterey language academy™ mmla.middlebury.edu | 866.216.0135
The Lodge at Otter Creek in Middlebury, Vermont is an adult living community, featuring a range of rental and financial options. Choose from one of our spacious Cottages, Independent and Assisted Living apartments or the Meadows and Haven Memory Care Programs.

Nestled on 36 acres of land, The Lodge is surrounded by breathtaking and magnificent views of the Adirondacks and the Green Mountains. The Lodge is just minutes from Middlebury College and historic downtown Middlebury. Here you’ll discover an enticing array of special events, activities, theater, educational opportunities, sporting events, shopping and walking trails.

The Lodge at Otter Creek offers a unique blend of beauty, grace and community that will enrich you, entertain you and make you feel like part of the family. The Lodge at Otter Creek, a perfect place for panthers.

Welcome Home. Welcome to The Lodge at Otter Creek.

Please give Holly Tippett a call at 802-388-1220 with inquiries or to schedule a tour.

350 Lodge Road • Middlebury, VT 05753 • 802-388-1220 • www.lodgeatottercreek.com

Directions: From the Green in downtown Middlebury go to route 7 South, at the 6th light take a right on Middle Road North. Drive to the end of the road and bear right up the hill to The Lodge at Otter Creek.

Owned and operated by Bullrock Corp., and affiliated with The Lodge at Shelburne Bay Senior Living Community.